The Harbour lies West of the Town at five Miles distance. The Beauty, Safety, and gradual Declivity of its Banks have got it the Name of the Bajon of Annapolis, by which Appellation it is usually distinguished. This Bajon is about a League and a half in Length, and near a League in Width, is well shelter'd from the Weather, and has Anchorage in good Ground for the most Part from twenty to five Fathom, and not less up the River as far as the Fort. The Road to which for Ships is on the North Side of the Bason, for a small Island called Goats Island, lies at the Mouth of the River so near the oppofite Shore, that the Passage on the South Side is almost impracticable, and on that Account is called Fool's Passage. Near this, to the South, lies a Sand Bank, or Shoal, two Miles in length, and half a Mile broad. small Rivers run into the Bason on this Side, which is rocky and mountainous. S. W. lies a moderately large Creek, from whence, by Means of a Carriage-Place about three Miles across, the Indians have a Way into the bottom of the Bay of St. Marie, which opens on the West Coast of the Peninfula.

The Passage into this fine Bason, which lies on the North West Point, is sometimes called St. George's Channel, but is really a very dangerous Gutt about a Mile long, with half that that boiste each of the in the Wear

Side Leag fula : Entr West two little whice

dian

 $\mathbf{F}_{\mathbf{f}}$

tweithe Place Me Year it is near Ifla Bar the to routha

La