Have Protested Against Violation of Belgium's Neutrality.

Conservative Association in Cumand Hall, Yonge street, last night, Mark Irish. M.L.A., made an appeal for greater confidence in heads of pub-lic committees and departments and he maintained that the criticism which so cheap at the present time did tle or nothing to improve matters. He made special reference to the somplaints made regarding Major-General Sir Sam Hughes and the militia department, but contended that while there may have been mistakes made by the department, yet it was bound to be admitted that the work ccomplished since the outbreak of he war had been mervellous. Speaking in connection with the attitude of the United States, he was at the opinion that that country had lost a great deal thru not protesting against the violation of Belgium's neurality and had gained nothing.

Expected Protest.

"We did expect, at least to see them protest," he declared. "We could not expect to see them fight, but we thought to see something more than numerous notes all stamped with the dollar mark." He concluded by stating that there was absolutely no need for pessimism as things in Canada were gradually improving.

were gradually improving.

John A. Cooper spoke on the question of the representation of Canada in the British Parliament. He said that the proposition along theoretical lines was just the same as 24 years ago, but much progress had been made practically. In this connection he referred to the visit of Premier Borden to England and his invitation to a to England and his invitation to a British Cabinet Council and the assistance which is being made by all the British Dominions in providing soldiers for overseas. Speaking of the situation he said that the people in Quebec who took the stand that they have being not exist British in the War. because representation has not yet been granted were not worthy of the name of Britishers. He advocated more free speech on the question of imperialism and urged the adoption of a system of military training similar to that which is proving so successful n Australia.

Followed by "Rosalind," Fifty Minute Play of Whimsical Fun.

The charm that is Barrie has never been set forth more delightfully than in "Rosalind," this newest of the Scotch dramatist's fifty-minute plays, which was presented by Marie Tempest and her excellent company at the Grand Opera House last night, following Robert Marshall's play of English social life, "The Duke of Killiecrankie." "Forty is a beautiful age," is the comforting theme in Barrie's "Rosalind." "Middle-age—How I dote on it!" exclaims his Rosalind. "It's such a comfy, pull-the-curtains, carpetsalind." And together they gaily depart for the London train, Charles to propose with increased ardom knowing now her true identity, and Rosalind, the comforts of her middle-age left behind, to what Barrie whimsically calls her "long 29."

In "The Duke of Killiecrankie" Miss In "The Duke of Killiecrankie" Miss Tempest is seen in the role she originated at the time of the comedy's first presentation in London, that of Mrs. Mulholland, a widow of charm and fascination, who on finding herself an unexpected party to the abduction by the Duke of Killiecrankie of the latter's hesitating sweetheart, and imprisoned with the others in a remote prisoned with the others in a remote country house, discovers a romantic and amusing way out of an embar-rassing predicament.

In both comedies, forming a splendid evening's entertainment, Miss Tempest has roles furnishing her with ample opportunity for the display of the flashing, brilliant, quick sense of hunor and deft, delicate methods of comedy which have made her the firmly established, charming leader among our present-day English-speaking com-ediennes. Graham Browne, Miss Tempest's leading man, gave a delightful interpretation of the character of the Duke, a role which he originated in the first London presentation of the play. Ferdinand Gottschalk was, as usual, the Pitt-Welby, a characterization of distinction. The supporting company was excellent and both comstage settings and quite up to the Frohman standard of painstaking at-tention to detail and good taste.
