

TITLES OF SOME OTHER BOOKS BY MR. NIVEN—AND PRESS OPINIONS.

ELLEN ADAIR.

"Astonishingly exact in its drawing never intemperate or tactless or at a loss."—Dixon Scott, in The Liverpool Post.

"Mr. Niven has written several other fine stories, but he has not done anything previously so good as this."—William Purvis, in The Sunday Chronicle.

A WILDERNESS OF MONKEYS.

"An original and fascinating book."—C. K. B., in T.P.'s Weekly.

"Mr. Niven, a slender David, goes forth to war with the pebble of wit and the pebble of style and the pebble of exquisite scorn. In the result we have one of the most graceful books imaginable in a subject that seems to call for the loud mouths of the prophets. . . . His book is of rare excellence. It is distinguished in its laughter, and its charm, serious in its imagination and its morals; it unites the grace of the minor poets to the frankness of the old satires."—Robert Lynd, in The Daily News.

"If it should seem that the book is overweighted with the sense of sex, we can only say that any such fault is more than balanced by its cleverness, humour, and love of beauty."—F. A. B., in The Observer.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

"Mr. Niven has done it. He has written a novel which is a genuine novel of ideas; and not a mere brilliantly accurate essay in observation Mr. Niven knows with the best of them what he is writing about. . . . It is a blessed relief to meet a first-rate novel in which one is not told everything; where even the author is not omniscient, and is content to leave his reader
