

counsels were full of touching interest, and made a deep impression. His remains were kept in the church, watched over by his people night and day for several days, in hopes that a minister would arrive for the funeral, and at length was borne to the grave followed by his tribe and many friends from neighbouring villages."

---