NOT ALL BLACK... A dusky potentate, the Alaka of Abbeoluta, once visited Westminster Abbey. The dean told the organist to play such airs as, while compatible with the sacredness of the locality, would still be lively enough to provide something suitable to tropical African taste.

So the music went on, when suddenly it occurred to the dean to ask, through an interpreter, if there was any music of the locality, which the Alaka would particularly like. Yes, "Abide with me," was the immediate reply.

Word was sent to the organist, who, without stopping, gradually transformed whatever he was improvising into what was asked for, and as the divine strains swelled through the Abbey the tears streamed down the black royal countenance.
