EVEN A SWEETHEART COULD NOT TELL TRIPLETS APART

Remarkable Trio of Port Colborne Soldier Boys Have Lived Parallel Lives; One Brother Ate Two Breakfasts While Third Was Away Without Permission

Niagara Falls, Ont., Jan. 23.—The town of Port Colborne affords an instance of triplets, not only growing to manhood but even wearing khaki.

The three sons of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Wegerich, James, William and John, were born just a little more than twenty years ago. Jack is in the Royal Flying Corps, and Jim and Will are in the 47th Battery. Jim and Will wanted to follow Jack into the Flying Corps, but the authorities decided otherwise.

The trio, all manly boys, started school together, and wrote their entrance examinations on the same day. One of the three failed, but when Hon. Dr. Pyne, minister of education, heard of the circumstances, he issued a certificate for all three. They started to high school together, and quit on the same day, two of them going into a bank, and the third taking a position as bookkeeper. They also offered themselves for military service on the same day.

The three boys are so remarkably alike that, only in recent years, was their father able to tell them apart. It is related that once when they were lads, Jack wanted to go to Buffalo, but his father refused him permission; Jack therefore got up early and proceeded on his way without his father suspecting it because when Will and Jim had their breakfast together, Jim went outside, walked around the barn, came in again and had another breakfast.

Naturally, and as a result of their close likeness, one to the other, there have been many interesting happenings. Will says he has very often spent a very pleasant evening with Jack's girl, and until Jack called next evening, she was none the wiser.
