IT IS A 4-FOR-A-QUARTER CIGAR

IT IS made by S. DAVIS & SONS, who have made cigars and nothing else, for over half a century.

IT IS called the DAVIS' "SUBLIME" CIGAR, and the name fits it well.

THE "SUBLIME" CIGAR

was made for the smoker, not for dealers' profits, and as a 4-for-a-quarter cigar represents a unique standard of value.

IT IS made by a firm which produces the celebrated "NOBLEMEN" CIGAR—renowned not only from the Atlantic to the Pacific, but beyond the seas.

REBELS CAPTURE SHANGHAI

Shanghai, Nov. 3.—Except for the foreign concessions Shanghai itself is entirely in the hands of the revolutionaries who captured the city late this afternoon. There was practically no resistance, only a few shots being fired. All the British soldiers have joined the rebels and the police and firemen apparently are sympathizing with them for they are wearing white badges on their arms.

LOGOMOTIVE ENGINEER HAS REMARKABLE EXPERIENCE

I have been thinking that word from me would benefit those who may be suffering as I was before I began taking my Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy. I am a locomotive engineer, employed on the Tyrone & Clearfield Branch of the Pennsylvania Railroad. Three years ago I was afflicted with kidney and bladder trouble so bad that I was compelled to leave off duty for my engine and was in bed for two months. However, my medicine did not benefit me. One day I received an advertisement for Swamp-Root, and I bought a bottle. I sent my name to the address for a sample bottle of Swamp-Root. At this time my trouble had nearly reached a serious stage. I sent for the sample bottle and in three days received a small bottle of Swamp-Root, which I took according to directions, and the third day I had taken the contents, I could pass water more freely. I was so pleased with my experiment that I sent my name to the address of W. H. Miller, Philadelphia, Pa., and secured a one-dollar bottle. I continued taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root until I feel my pain or soreness after being exposed to bad weather or hard work. I take a dose of two of Swamp-Root. I cannot recommend this remedy too highly, especially to brother engineers who are more or less troubled with their kidneys (more than any other class of men).

Yours truly,

Personally appeared before me, a Notary Public, T. J. Van Scoyck, who being duly sworn, doth depose and say that the foregoing statement is true. Sworn and subscribed to before me this 15th day of July, A.D., 1910.

You will also receive a booklet of valuable information, telling all about the kidneys and bladder. When writing, be sure and mention the St. John Evening Times-Star, Regular 5c., and $1.25 size bottles for sale at all drug stores in Canada.

Lady Herbert of Lea—The House of Bentinck Rich in Historical Association—One Member Saved Life of William of Orange

(Copyright, 1911, by the Brentwood Company)

The death of Lady Herbert Lea during the last week has placed in mourning one of the two American Lady Herberts, the widow of the late Sir Michael Herbert who died as British ambassador to the United States; daughter of the late Richard T. Wilson of New York and sister of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt and Mrs. Ogden Goelet, both of that city. The late Lady Herbert of Lea was no stranger to the United States. After her conversion to the Roman Catholicism by the late Cardinal Manning, she collected a large sum of money there for the benefit of the great Roman Catholic missionary college at Mill Hill, which owes to her its foundation and endowment. She was persona grata at the Vatican, and divided her time between Rome and Herbert House in London, at the southeast corner of Belgrave Square; unique among the mansions of the British metropolis in its possession of a private chapel where masses were celebrated every morning.

She was the widow of Lord Herbert of Lea, better known as Sydney Herbert, late brother of the 12th Earl of Pembroke renowned as the most comely and fascinating man of his day. He was portrayed by Lord Beaconsfield in several of his novels, notably in "Endymion," under the name of Sydney West. He was the son of Herbert of Lea as was minister during the Crimean campaign, that England was indebted for the dispatch of Miss Florence Nightingale to the east and for the inauguration, through her, of that system of military nursing which has benefited by every civilized nation of the world. The present Earl of Pembroke is the son of Lord and Lady Herbert of Lea.

The House of Bentinck

Lord Gladstone's secretary, Major Walter Bentinck of the Rifle Brigade, who has just obtained from King George a warrant enabling him and his male relatives to use the title of Baron, is, in point of seniority, the head of the principal representative of the Bentincks of Schoonheten who are descended from Baron Eusebius Bentinck of Schoonheten, burgomaster of Amsterdam, in 1670, who was the elder brother of Hans Bentinck, first Earl of Portland. This peer, who died as the most intimate friend and trusted counsellor of King William III., of Great Britain and Ireland, is the ancestor of the Bentincks and Cavendishes in England, of whom the Duke of Portland is the chief; of the Counts of Bentinck in Holland; in Prussia and in Wurtemberg, one of the American Bentincks, now represented by Count Otto Bentinck, of Marlborough, New York.

Major Walter Guy Bentinck, from now on Baron Bentinck of Schoonheten, is an officer of the English Brigade, who resigned the Distinguished Service Order for conspicuous gallantry in the Transvaal war, where he was severely wounded. He is now in the staff of Lord Gladstone, who is in turn residing magistrate and district commissioner in the Transvaal in spite of his having fought under the English flag ten years ago, his ancestral Dutch name and ancestry of the Boers.

He is married to the daughter of a fellow officer of the Rifle Regiment, Col. Burnett Ramsay, and has one son to inherit the Dutch barony, which was bestowed upon William Bentinck of Velde, Holland, who at the same time received the name of name Schoonheten.

The Bentincks, who take their name from Bentinck in the province of the Netherlands, where they were already flourishing at the beginning of the thirteenth century, played a very important role in the history of the Low Countries during the fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth centuries and, curiously enough, in 1699 made their principal home at Het Loo, now the summer residence of Queen Wilhelmina.

Speech on Mormonism in 1877

Editor Times:
Sir,—As the pulpit and the press are at present giving attention to the subject of Mormonism, I am sending you an account of a lecture delivered in this city in the Mechanics Institute on that subject on Thursday evening, Feb. 22, 1877 which might interest your readers. It is as follows:—

"Mrs. Ann Eliza Young was met at the Mechanics Institute on Thursday evening last by one of the finest audiences ever assembled there to hear a lecture. Her appearance before them and her address on the subject of polygamy was in every way successful. Giving in a modest and easy style, the history of her own life, and reciting the dreadful wrongs and sufferings which the false faith in which she had been born and brought up imposed upon herself,—wrongs and sufferings endured in whelps and hopeless silence by hundreds and thousands of other sensitive women and young children, who are the wives and the offspring of Mormons. Mrs. Young awakened the sympathies and touched the hearts of all her hearers. Her lecture was directed to the single purpose of showing the misery and mental distress, as well as the degrading and slavish social conditions into which this abominable system of Mormonism plunged its victims, and she succeeded most fully in carrying out her design.

There could have been few persons in the institute hall on Thursday evening who did not come away more deeply impressed, than they ever before had been with horror at the debasing and frightful results of polygamy, and more than ever filled with contempt for the false system of Mormonism, with hatred towards its selfish and brutal prophet and apostles and with pity for their miserable dupes.

Mrs. Young's denunciation of the arch-deceiver, Brigham Young, of the cruel and remorseless organization which bases its authority and power upon the hopes and the fears of the weak and its sinner devotees, as well as upon the greed and sensuality of its hypocritical apostles and elders, was all the more effective because it was conveyed in measured language and mild tones. Her diction, her style, and her manner of speaking are alike chaste and dignified and soon win for her the respect as well as the sympathy of her audience.

There can be little doubt that her public address, and the book in which she has put before the world the plain story of her own life as a disciple of the Mormon faith, must tend strongly to direct the power of public opinion and Christian sentiment against the iniquitous system which has its seat in Utah and is a gross scandal to the people and the laws of the United States, and an offense against the religion and culture of the age. We heartily wish her the fullest success in her brave crusade against that evil and blasphemous system.

Yours,

Saved Life of Prince of Orange

The most notable member of the family may be said to have been Hans Bentinck who, as a page in the service of William of Orange, saved his master's life, through the devotion which he manifested through a violent attack of smallpox which he himself was subsequently stricken with, his good looks being marred thereby.

Hans Bentinck accompanied his royal patron to England, and when the Prince of Orange ascended the throne as William III., Hans Bentinck became the most influential personage of the realm. He was created Earl of Portland and a Knight of the Garter and received considerable estates.

This Hans Bentinck, Earl of Portland, fought by King William's side at the battle of the Boyne. He was married twice. His son by his first marriage succeeded to his English honors and became first Duke of Portland. By the earl's second marriage he had a son named William, who inherited his extensive Dutch and German estates, and who was created a count of the Holy Roman Empire by Emperor Charles VI. The title being heritable by all of his descendants. He married the only daughter and heiress of Anthony II., sovereign Count of Kniphausen and of Varel. Their eldest son, Christian, succeeded to his maternal grandfather's petty sovereignty, which passed on his death to his own eldest son, Count William Gustav Bentinck.

This Count William married a rich widow, Harrietta Lynden and subsequently contracted a union with a woman named Sarah Gerdes, daughter of one of his farmers, who bore him a couple of boys, William and Gustav. This union was not ratified by the church until 1808, when William and Gustav were already in their teens. But their father claimed that his marriage to his wife prior to that date had been a "morganatic" (marriage by consent), and that his sons were therefore legitimate, and entitled to succeed to the sovereignty of Kniphausen.

In Courts 25 Years

This view was contested at his death, by his younger brother, Count John Charles Bentinck, a general of the English army, and the great Bentinck succession lawsuit, which lasted more than a quarter of a century, ensued. The decision was ultimately given against the sons of the sovereign Count, William Augustus Bentinck, by his second and peasant wife, on the ground that, although not actually illegitimate, as asserted in the English "Peerages," notably by "Burke," they were at any rate the offspring of a marriage, and therefore barred from the succession.

PREVENTION!—The Modern Doctor's Watchword.

To prevent disease is easier than to cure it, and Bovril and Bread and Butter are a great team to keep the system in shape to repel disease.

A cup of Bovril, or a Bovril sandwich between meals or at night will dispel fatigue and keep one "fit."

"Merry no," said the lady who was calling on me. "I don't see why I'm so tired today," ruminated the lady who was calling on me. "You've just told me that your husband brought home three guests and you had to get up a big dinner for them," I reminded her, "Doesn't that explain it?"

"Really no," said the lady who was calling on me. "Of course, there was a good deal of cooking to do and a tremendous pile of dishes, but I'm used to that sort of thing. I'll tell you what I think tired me more than the work in the early afternoon. I had to go to R—to pay a bill for Frank, and coming back, the car broke down and I was delayed. I was so afraid I would be late about starting tonight, and I had half past six. If there is anything he can't abide it's not having things just on time. And really, the worry about getting home took more out of me than the work I did when I got home."

How much more do you think most of us use up in actual work, actually accomplishing things compared with the amount we use up in trying to get along with difficult people, in combating crochets, in looking out for sharp corners and dispositions, in harmonizing inharmonious people, and in general fretting lest we may not please or satisfy someone in some respect?

For a man, perhaps less energy is utilized in this way. Somehow men don't seem to be expected to look out for other people's crochets and please everybody in quite the same way women are. The woman I spoke of at the beginning dissipated her energy fretting lest she should be a little bit late.

Perhaps you've done that.

But if you haven't, surely you have dissipated energy in worrying lest someone or other would not be satisfied with what you were doing, "but I just hate to iron Marion's shirtwaists because she is so particular about them. I declare it takes less out of me to do a whole dress for myself than a simple waist for her."

A dressmaker once told me that she would never work for people who were so much more than when she worked for reasonable people.

These are but two examples of the way in which other people's crochets and whimsies and eccentricities and exactingness take more out of us than our work. And please, in case you are sufficiently interested in the line of thought to follow these are not other people's crochets as well as the way other people's eccentricities and exactingness take it out of you.

I assure you, you will probably find one branch of the subject as fertile as the other, and—in case you are one of those people who seem to see a fault in themselves is equivalent to trying to correct it,—much more valuable.
