But He Seidm Does It.

The other day a fair dandied visited one of the St. John bowling alleys, enquire when the ladies bowed she wished to take up the game. Being informed by the general manager that they usually played between six and seven in the evenings she asked permission to watch a game that was then in progress. Possibly due to the presence of the young lady the manager cut out a single pin and shot the next ball through the sub-way.

"Are you practicing?" innocently enquired the fair spectator.

This was too much for the bowler, who shot the next ball down the gutter. Now every time he misses a pin someone enquires if he is practicing.

PARIS WRITING IN THE SKY.

An advertising "stunt" which dims some of the glory of our American illuminated signs, has just been carried to a successful end by a French aviator, who has succeeded in writing on the Paris sky the complete name of a maker of automobiles. The aviator and the firm which backed him, now that they have been able to look into the heavens and read a trade word in the daytime, have turned their ambitions to producing letters and words which will glow at night, and keep the name of the firm before the crowd in the streets below both before and after sunset.

PARIS WRITING IN THE SKY.

"The process is as follows," says M. Richard in an official interview in Paris. "A substance composed of various elements, which is secret, is introduced into the gasoline in the engine of the airplane. This substance, which is thrown out behind the machine by the exhaust pipes, produces the fine white plume of mist which appears in the sky behind the plane. The vapor is controlled by a mechanism which resembles the machinery of a machine gun, and those at the head of the city can make it inject or stop the flow of the elements which produce the vapor from them or fly upside down, if often happens that, when the aviator has reached the end of a letter which ends in a dot like 'e', he has to execute a spin."

PARIS WRITING IN THE SKY.

"The alignment of the letters does not present much difficulty, since the aviator can get his distance from the preceding letters. What is vastly more difficult is the keeping of parallel lines. This is done by observation of a spot on the ground; when the letters were written over Paris, the axis of the Champs Elysees was chosen.

PARIS WRITING IN THE SKY.

"It is not indispensable that the weather should be absolutely calm; it has been found, however, that the summer is the best season of the year for such writing. The first public attempt was successful. The final flight was preceded by twelve trial flights, when about twenty inscriptions were produced which were visible at a distance of fifteen kilometers.

PARIS WRITING IN THE SKY.

"We have heard complaints about the danger to people on the ground in a city over which an aviator is flying in so hazardous a performance. The Paris police regulations compel a pilot to fly at an altitude not less than 2,000 meters, which would allow the aviator ample opportunity to reach any of the aerodromes in the suburbs of the city in case of accident. The inartistic character of such an inscription as we are attempting has also been criticized. For the time being at least the number of such writings on the sky is rather limited, first by the weather, which is very rarely favorable for ideal flying conditions of this character, and again by the high cost of such a performance.

"Let me add that this method of inscription possesses other values than merely advertising opportunity. It constitutes a rapid method of spreading information, such as the result of a boxing match or a game. It has even been suggested as a means of signalling at sea, or in naval manoeuvres.
