THE BRITISH PARLIAMENTARY SESSION

The British Liberal government during its first parliamentary session just closed has accomplished the astounding political feat of keeping its pre-election promises. Almost all the pledges offici ally made during the heat of the last campaign have been either kept to the letter or such action has been taken as to leave no doubt of the government's intention to carry them out in the near future. The promised reform of the education system resulted in the passage of the principal measure of the session, the education bill, The promise to the Labor party has been kept by promises to Ireland, made while in opposition. Liberal opposition criticism of Conservative policy in South Africa has been followed by a courageous, if no matter how atroclous his offense, is not reckless attempt at reorganiza-ever punished without fair and legal one of the best known men in the tion of the internal affairs of that troubled country. And, most wonderful of all, opposition pledges or economy in administering the empire have been carried out, even to the extent of frightening the people by radical retrenchment in the expenses of the army and navy. Even if the government should be overthrown before it passes another scrap of legislation it has won a high reputation for honesty and good intention, even if it has laid itself open to charges of unwise statesmanship. But in spite of its good record the government is not as strong as it was when parliament opened. Disagreements, inevitable in so large unwieldy a conglomeration and factions, have at times of eut its enormous majority down to dangerously near the vanishing point and have made it apparent that the premier must display great finesse and do not a little trimming if he would navigate his rather unmanageable ship through the troubled waters of a long parliamentary term. So far he has managed to hold safely the unstable labor vote, but if he should ever lose his grip on this and at the surance. same time estrange the nationalists. his position would be precarious. Outside parliament also there has been evidence that the government's popular strength is by no means comnsurate with its normal majority.

The unprecedented warmth of the popular celebration of Chamberlain's birthday was not without its significance, and, on the whole, the byelections have indicated a falling tide of Liberalism. The most notable in1 stance of this trend was given last week when a Unionist, Sir John S. Rendles was elected for the Cockermouth division of Cumberland, made vacant by the death of Sir Wilfred Lawson, the noted Liberal and prohibitionist, who carried the constituency in the general election by 568 votes, his unsuccessful competitor being the present victor.

Everything goes wrong if the breakst lies in your stomach like a mud pie. What you eat does harm if you an't digest it-it turns to poison. A bright lady teacher found this to be true, even of an ordinary light break-fast of eggs and toast. She says: "Two years ago I contracted a very annoying form of indigestion. My stomach was in such a condition that a simple breakfast of fruit, toast and egg gave me great distress.

"I was slow to believe that trouble could come from such a simple diet but finally had to give it up, and found a great change upon a cup of hot Postum and Grape-Nuts with cream, for my morning meal. For more than a year I have held to this course and have not suffered except when injudiciously varying my diet.
