Under-Currents

By The Duchess

"I see; and you wrote back to him, saying you were coming over to England once again?" questions Mr. Dysart, his eyes now fastened upon the other. "Most natural; but you did not drop a hint of your business."

"Fish! what d'ye take me for! Let another into a chance of getting W had my own rights! No, sir, I did not even tell him I was coming to England."

"No—not even that?" The eyes now seem to be burning, so lurid is their light.

"Not him, nor any other man, there or here. I took ship without bidding good-bye to a soul, landed at Plymouth, and came on here without exchanging a confidence with a soul, and I'll go back again without a word to a soul, on this subject, if you treat me as I deserve and expect to be treated."

"Ah! Well, I confess I am glad to hear that," says Dysart in a curious tone. Then no one knows of your business here?"

"No one knows I am here, in fact," says Sedley, with his loud, irritating laugh.

"How sensible! how truly wise!" says the old man, leaning back in his chair with a little appreciative nodding of the head at Sedley, but a rather exhausted air. No one knows."

"It seems to ring through his brain 'I'm not sure that people won't know, though—if we don't come to terms,' says Sedley, with a facetious air. 'I've the pull over you, you see, old chap, when you consider that those girls are in the next room, as it were. A word to them, and—'

"I thought when I gave you that cheque, on your leaving for Australia now twenty years ago, that you considered yourself indemnified for any risk you may have run."

"There was no risk for me. I did nothing. 'Twas my silence you bought."

"Ah! you are wrong there, I think," gently. "There is such a thing as compounding a felony. You may have heard of it?"

"I have. It don't frighten me," says Sedley indifferently. "I'm thinking you'll pay up rather than let it come to open court."

"You are evidently of a deeply penetrative mind. But to return to our argument. When I paid you that sum, you agreed to accept it as a final payment. You signed a bond, I remember, that—"

"Would you like me to show up that bond—to your eldest niece, let us say?" asks Sedley with a contemptuous sneer. "Try it. It will cost you a trifle that I shall, I bet you, 'twill cost you all."

"You gave your word then," says the old man doggedly. "You swore—"

"Pah! You got to with the value of an oath, with the word honour in form? Though, indeed, a false oath won't be a good deal in your line. Why look here now," savagely.

"Low as you think me, I never did what you have done; poor as you know me to be, I wouldn't stand in your shoes for a good deal. I never robbed the orphan, the fatherless; I never defrauded my own—"

"Silence!" says Dysart in a terrible tone, rising to his feet, his face ashen. He is trembling in every limb. Then it is all over; he conquers the excitement, and sinks back in his chair again, weaker, but outwardly perfectly calm. "Name your price," he says.

"Five thousand pounds," says the other coolly.

"Five thousand! You must be mad. Not one penny less. My silence is worth that—and more. But that will do for the present."

"I haven't it!" I swear I haven't," says Dysart in an agitated tone. "Then you'll find it. Pshaw, man! d'ye take me for a fool that I don't know what you're worth—that the value is of this property—P who lived on it as steward, as trusted agent for so long? Give up that hope Dysart; I know if I said twenty thousand there would be no reason why I should not get it."

"Y! forget the expenses of an estate like this. And I have a son—an—an—expensive son. And then these girls; they too are thrown upon my hands."

"So am I," says Sedley, with a burst of vulgar mirth. "Come, don't imagine you can impose on me. I tell you," raising his voice, "I would think as little of going into that room out there, and twining your necks of that first will, than—"

"Hush—hush!" says Dysart in a sharp tone, wild with fear. He rises quickly, noiselessly to his feet, and stands like a ghost before Sedley, his arms upraised.

"Not another word, nor a breath on that subject here. Walls have ears. How dare you even hint at it within the house? Is there no safer place, than you? Be silent! I tell you, as you value your life!"

It is rather melodramatic—a trifle stagey; but the actor's get-up redeems it from mediocrity. The agony of apprehension expressed by the expressive face; the very pallor of that face round which the long grey, venerable hair is streaming as it escapes from beneath the ghastly skull-cap that crowns the head; the marvellous power of those strange, brilliant eyes; the feebleness of the gaunt emaciated frame—all impress Sedley in spite of himself. Yet.

It Took Years to Learn

That in Dr. Chase's Ointment There is Positive Cure for Piles and Hemorrhoids.

Reports come to us almost daily from persons who have suffered 10, 20, 30 years or more from piles or hemorrhoids before finding out that Dr. Chase's Ointment affords immediate relieving and distressing ailment.

This is not a trouble about which people care to speak, but if you ask your friends about Dr. Chase's Ointment you will be surprised to hear how many have been cured of piles by its use. It is the one treatment for piles on which you can depend absolutely for prompt relief.

Mr. B.F. Tracy, Minn., Ont., writes: "For about thirty-five years I was troubled with itching piles which kept me from sleep until I was completely worn out. Then at length I would drop off to sleep and rub myself raw. I tried every kind of ointment made without any permanent good. I also tried a homeopathic doctor, but only had momentary relief from his treatments. Three years ago I tried Dr. Chase's Ointment, and about half a box completely cured me. I have never been troubled with piles since, and can heartily recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to anyone suffering from this terrible agony or from any other skin disease."

("This is to certify that the above statement is correct in every particular."—Rev. H. Berry, pastor Methodist Church.)

Mr. H.B. MacDonald, Walkerton, Ont., writes: "Having suffered from piles for some time, I finally tried Dr. Chase's Ointment, which afforded almost instant relief, and in time, cure. I have great faith in Dr. Chase's Ointment, and think it superior to any ointment on the market. I would advise anyone suffering from piles to give it a trial."

Many continue to suffer from piles in the belief that a surgical operation is the only cure. Fortunately, Dr. Chase's Ointment is available, and has saved thousands of dollars in the risk and expense of the doctors' knife, 60 cents a box, all dealers, or by mail postpaid, from Edmondson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.
