MY LESSON STORY THIS WEEK.

“NOW remember, Larry, cousin Ida is in charge when I am away. I trust you to be good and obedient.” “All right father.” “Good-bye then, if mother is well enough we expect to be home this day week.” Mrs. Delany had been spending the winter abroad and her husband was going to fetch her home. While he was away his niece Ida had promised to look after the house and her young cousin. For the first few days Larry was on his good behaviour and all went well; but one evening a travelling circus encamped on the common outside the town and Larry wanted to go. Ida knew that the roughest people would be there, and saw that the boards where the people would sit were very unsafely put up, and noticed how the canvas of the tent swayed with the wind, and decided that it would be safer for Larry not to go. “It’s a shame and all nonsense about it not being safe,” said Larry to himself. “I will go I don’t care what happens.” In another minute he was hurrying towards the common, where the tent was pitched. But before he got there an unpleasant little voice seemed sounding in his ears—“I trust you to be good and obedient.”—“All right father.” Was he keeping his promise? He stopped, stood still for a moment and said, “No, but I will be obedient,” then turned, and ran back home again at full speed. He bounded into the house where Ida sat at work. “Hello Larry what’s up?” she said. “I’ve been having a race—a race with the enemy and I’ve won.” “I am delighted to hear that,” said his cousin, and then Larry told her everything. Next morning the first news they heard was that a terrible accident had happened at the circus the night before. It was a wild gusty night, and somebody raised the cry that the tent was falling. The alarm was false, but there was a panic, and a rush for the doors. Many people were thrown down and trampled on, and others hurt by the planks that formed the seats being overturned. Wasn’t it good that Larry remembered his father’s words, and was obedient?

MY QUESTIONS THIS WEEK.

1. What great missionary are we learning about to-day?
2. Who went with Paul?
3. What is the Golden Text?
4. Who said these words?
