Hawaiian Guitars.

The manufacture of ukuleles is one of the industries of Hawaii. Early in the eighties Portuguese immigrants from the Madeira Islands arrived in Honolulu, many of them bringing what appeared to be a very small guitar. It was played by holding it close to the body, the fingers of the left hand mandate in the body. left hand grasping the neck and the fingers of the right hand sweepnig the the motion with the right hand sweeping the entire set of strings. The rapidity of the motion with the right hand caused the Hawaiians to call the instrument "ukulele" or "dancing flee."

The motifs of design in cut-glass of traceable in their features to the now antique forms and decorations in vogue in Ireland when that country was at the zenith of its glass-making

Little is known of the early history of Irish glass, but there is sufficient to warrant the assumption that it was among the arts practised at a period when Ireland was world famous for its skilled craftsmen, in such industries as wood-carving, metal-working, etc. An old Irish saying gave "The best hands in the world are the hand of a good carpenter, the hand of a good smith and the hand of a skilled

At the time when Irish glass was at its best, from the decorative point, facetted cuttings largely preponderated. The chief centre of the facetted industry was Waterford, but Cork, Belfast, Dublin, Londonderry, Dundalk and Carrickfergus— in the order named—all contributed, some of the districts having decorating plants only. A peculiarity of the Dublin centre was the manufacture of the blueglass linings so frequently seen in the perforated silverware baskets. perforated silverware baskets, sugars and creams, and the table salt-hold-ers of the Queen Anne and Georgian period styles. Cork also had its own specialty in its combination of engraving and gilding combined with the facetted cuttings. Engraving, by the copper wheel process, was mainly used upon glass for the dinner table, while the gilding was applied to articles for milady's dressing table, cologne battles, powder boxes, brush, and pin trays. It is these combinations in treatment that the cut glass of to-day resembles the work of other days long past. The glass-cutter now is doing the work of the engraver of olden times, and by using stone instead of copper wheels, in completing the double-motive design, brings his work into the glass-cutting class. period styles. MODERN WIRE ROPE.

Mathematical Precision Rules Every Process in Its Making.

Although wire rope has been used as mechanical appliance for almost 5,000 years, it is commonly regarded as a modern invention. During the many years which have elapsed since the first records of its use wire rope has passed from a crude to a highly developed product, and the purposes for which it is employed have increased a thousandfold. In no other branch of the American steel industry is there so great a demand for material of proved integrity, for it might be safely suggested that wire rope is born to be abused. It is subjected to tremendous tensic strains; it must withstand constant bendings, abrasion, corrosion and the peculiar internal stress produced by vibration.

Wire rope as it is made to-day is the product of the metallurgist and the mechanic. Every process, from the smelting of the ores, the cold drawing of the wire and the heat treatments it received down the corrections. receives down to the stranding or laying up of the cable, is conducted with mathematical precision.

The chemist sees that only steel of the proper analysis is used; the elec-tric pyrometer insures uniformity of heat; treatment in various testing ma-chines clearly develops the worth of the product before it is allowed to leave the mill. Wire rope is used in the mine shafts more than a mile in depth, and may be found on aeroplanes which sail a mile or more above the ground.

A CURIOUS ANIMAL.

The Sea Cow Gave Rise to the Legend of the Sirens.

The dugong, or sea cow, is a peculiar animal. It resembles the familiar seal, but it has no hair on the body and is more nearly related to porprises and whales.

This animal is found on the shores of the Indian Ocean, about fifteen degrees on each side of the equator, from East Africa to Australia, and also in the Red Sea. It is a marine animal which never ascends the rivers, its food consisting chiefly of seaweed and the algae found in the water. Years ago it was reported to have been found in large herds of several hundred inin large nerds of several hundred in-dividuals and to have been so fearless as to allow itself to be touched with the hand of man. In recent years, however, it is met with only in twos and threes, and has become very shy and wary. Its flesh has been regarded as a delicacy, and it is stated that the Malay kings claim as royal property all those taken within their domain.

Its habit of raising its round head cut of the water, and its great affection for its young, which it carries under the fore fin, are thought to have given rise to the legend of the mermaid, in allusion to which the name sirenia was given by this order of mammals. It was recorded that it was mammals. It was recorded that it was with the skin of the dugong, or sea cow, that the Jewn were directed to veil the tabernace and not the "badger" skins as translated in the authorized version of the Bible.—New York Post.

Swords and Walking Sticks.

The walking stick, as we know it at present, gained its popularity in France during the eighteenth century, when it came to be carried by rich people who had no right to wear swords. The dandies twirled thin bamboo canes in their fingers, but the great financiers, who had considerable influence at that time, made the sticks fashionable additions to their wardrobes and sometimes paid as much as 10,000 crowns for one. as much as 10,000 crowns for one. This carrying of a walking stick was regarded as a democratic triumph over the hobility, who refused the commoners the right to wear swords. -London Standard.
