

THE LIGHT-HOUSE KEEPER'S STORY.

FROM the lighthouse at Lovers Cove Head, Bonavista Bay, Newfoundland, Mr. V. May, young son of the keeper, writes:

"I have been with my father with him for seven years, and to my great delight Zam-Buk has cured me. The disease started in my breast, and spread until it extended over my back. The itching and burning—especially when the affected part was washed—was terrible, and yet the prescription recommended or issued, it seemed to had worse and caused great pain. I went to doctor, and tried various prescriptions, but nothing gave relief, so tried another doctor. Again I got no relief, so tried a third doctor, and then a fourth."

"Seven years is a long time to suffer, and I had got used to the thought that I never would be cured, when I saw a report in the Family Herald telling how Zam-Buk had cured the wife of one of their men."

"I thought Zam-Buk might do the same for me, so wrote to the manufacturer, and he sent me free from charge, some Zam-Buk, which I have been taking ever since, and now I am well again."

"I used the cream, stopped the pain, and the sores began to dry up and disappear. In short, I found Zam-Buk all that was claimed for it and within a very short time it worked a complete cure in my case."

"Since that time I have recommended it for several other cases, and in each it has proved as wonderful result."

THE MURKIN.

(Concluded.)

"There comes your brother Minnie." The Rev. Mr. Cameron came down the platform. Seeing Mrs. Mellen, he paused, and, grasping her hand, exclaimed:

"I came near passing on the other side. May I ask what brings you to Rivermoor unannounced?"

"My husband's father is very low."

"Yes, I know. He was alive this morning," replied the minister.

Christopher bowed coldly when they met. It was all he ever did now.

Mrs. Whitney had thrown up her veil, and now came to the group.

"How do you do, Belle—Mrs. Whitney? Your first visit to the place is upon a sad occasion," remarked Ned Cameron as he clasped her hand.

"I think it would be best for me to go with Ned. Your Father would not recognize me if I were to go there, and you could come for me if anything should happen," said Minnie to her husband.

"Do as you think best, Minnie, but I prefer that you accompany me to my father's home."

"Let us go, then. It is quite dark now."

"The carriage is at the opposite side of the depot. May must have expected you," said Mrs. Whitney.

sisters, for after that time all was peace between them.

Quietly removing their outside garments, the little group entered the keeping room.

How well remembered was every object in that room, as Mrs. Whitney looked about her, and wondered if it could be possible that she had lived and loved within its walls. Then at a signal from May they all followed her into the great west room, where May and Dorothy had also followed Belle to look upon the dead body of their mother.

Upon a low bed the old man lay sleeping. His thin lips were half closed, and his eyelids were lifted the least bit in the world, letting a narrow thread of white appear between them. It would have been hard to say whether he was dead or alive, had not May assured them that he was still living.

Christopher bent over him a moment, listening for his breathing, then turned away, saying in a low tone:

"He is almost gone."

Minnie covered her face with her hands, and stood a little apart from the group, and Mrs. Whitney, always ready to make herself conspicuous, raised her silk more loudly than Christopher talked, and knelt upon the braided rug before the bed.

"Poor father! poor dear father!" she wailed. The cry awoke him.

"Who calls father? Mrs. Goldie came for me?" he muttered, in the incipient tones of the dying.

"Not yet, father dear," said May softly, stepping between Mrs. Whitney and the bed. "Belle has come, to you want to see her?"

"Belle? Belle? I can't see her now. When I get into the new house I'll send for her."

The pale lips closed, and the weary head moved wearily upon the pillow. "We must go on now," whispered May, leading the way to the keeping room.

Everything brought to Mrs. Whitney's mind the time when she had been the watcher and the often had come to look upon her dead.

She sighed weakly as she thought of the changes since then; and the nearness of death, instead of softening her proud heart, only made it grow harder and more vindictive.
