T.A. Ladies' Sale Closes.

A HANDSOME SUM REALIZED. The Ladies Aid of the Total Abstinence Society, the members of which have been conducting a sale of work in the Society club rooms for the past three days, brought the affair to a fitting close last night and finished it up with a dance. The attendance throughout the three days was very large. The sale was a success in every way, and the receipts came up to expectations. The dance was attended by large numbers, the music being supplied by Bennett's Orchestra for the occasion. During the evening supper was served after which dancing was kept up until an early hour this morning. The ladies, who worked assiduously during the sale are to be congratulated on the success of their efforts.

De Quincey the Opium Eater.

Thomas De Quincey, who died at Edinburgh on Dec. 8, 1859, was born Aug. 15, 1785, in a house still standing, at Greenheys, then a rural suburb of Manchester, but now incorporated in bricks and mortar. In 1801 he was sent to the Manchester Grammar School and lived in the school precincts. There he became ill owing to not being allowed sufficient exercise. He therefore resolved to escape, and ran away in July, 1802. He walked over a great part of Wales and ultimately got to London, where he entered into negotiations with money-lenders, but they were very dilatory, and meanwhile his own money became exhausted. While waiting for them to make him an advance he was allowed to live in a large empty house in Greek Street, Soho, along with a neglected child and vast numbers of rats. A chance meeting with a relative led to his restoration to his family, who then sent him to Oxford, where he became a student of Worcester College. On a visit to London he had a violent toothache for which he bought some laudanum from a druggist in Oxford Street. This was his introduction to opium, of which he became inordinately fond. Though he afterwards wrote a book, "Confessions of an English Opium Eater," he did not eat opium, nor did he smoke it as is the usual practice, but he drank it in the form of laudanum continuously for many years till he could drink with impunity many glasses daily. After leaving Oxford he made the acquaintance of Coleridge, who also took opium, and then of Wordsworth and Southey. He took a cottage at Grasmere, became one of the Lake school of authors, and married in 1816 Margaret Simpson, a native of those parts. To provide for his family he wrote for the magazines, and his connection with "Blackwood" led to his removal to Edinburgh in 1830, where he lived for the rest of his life. The chief result of his laudanum drinking was tremendous dreams, some of which he has recorded in his book of confessions. He was of diminutive size and appearance, but in conversation he was charming, his mind being stored with knowledge which he clothed in the most gorgeous language. He collected works in 15 vols., mainly appeared first as magazine articles. They contain many splendid passages of impassioned prose, for he was one of the very greatest masters of the English language.

The Telegrapher.

FIRST CHRISTMAS NUMBER. The first of the Christmas numbers to make its appearance this season is that of the "Telegrapher," the official organ of the Newfoundland Postal Telegraphers Association, and we thank Editor Woodford for an advance copy of his very interesting number. The Telegraphers Association had for its 1922 motto "Let us strive to excel in everything we do." In respect to their Christmas edition this motto has been exemplified, and as a rival to local publications, its place in the front rank will not easily be taken. Amongst those contributing readable and seasonable articles are such well known writers as H. W. LeMessurier, C.M.G., Rev. H. J. Read (Channel), H. F. Shortis, and the well known Topsall poetess, Miss P. Florence Miller. The Telegrapher's December issue breathes of the Christmas spirit. The illustrations are reproduced from photographs of W. J. Woodford, first Secy.-Treas., M. F. Hackett, President; Hon. W. W. Halfyard, Mr. J. T. Meany, former member of the Association, Mr. P. J. Kinsella, Mr. J. H. Small, V.P.; the late Alex. Read of Curling; Miss Mabel Forsey, Grand Bank, member of the Executive; Mr. George White, member of the Executive; Mr. W. J. Dewey, M.E., and a cut of the Grand Falls War Memorial, a replica of the London Cenotaph.
