It begins to look brighter for Chicago boxing, the police officials who were sent to the Chicago Athletic Assiciation on Saturday, to view the bouts held there, having reported that there was nothing brutal about the boxing, and nothing to call for censure. That's about the only report that could be made on a properly-conducted boxing show. As a matter of fact, it's almost too humane. The injection of a little something resembling brutality would rid the game of a lot of four-flushing persons who couldn't have been coaxed into the ring in the days when fighting flourished, and boxing had not arrived. -Detroit Free Press.
