Don't Let Horses Gnaw Trees.

One of the most grievous injuries that is done to our shade trees is caused by the now used. gnawing of bark by horses. This gnawing is for the most part done in the spring, when the tree is full of sap. The bark is then most inviting to the animals appetite, and it is at that time that the most damage may be done to the tree. When such a wound has once been made in a tree it grows rapidly, the trunk becomes terribly disfigured, and the tree is soon seen to be slowly dying. As soon as the trunk has been stripped of its bark in one spot the solid wood of the tree, being exposed to the weather and without nature's protection, soon dies, and as this crumbles away each year a new layer is exposed to the air until the gaping wound eats to the very heart of the tree. Many of the fine trees that once gave welcoming shade have been felled simply because a glaring wound in their trunks, caused by this gnawing by horses, rendered them a menace the passerby.

Simple Cure for Lockjaw.

A writer in Clark's Horse Review gives his experience in curing lockjaw, in which he says: "If a nail is picked up get it out, of course, as soon as possible; then get a half pail of hot water—as hot as the horse can possibly stand it—pour plenty vinegar and also plenty of salt. A Pest.

Prof. Harvey, entomologist of the Maine State experimental station at Orono, has sent out a description of one of the worst insect pests that prey upon raspberry and strawberry plants. It is a small black beetle about one-eighth of an inch long. These beetles hibernate and come out in the early spring, doing great damage to the flower buds. They soon mate and lay eggs for another brood. The grubs live in the roots of the plants and later appear as beetles, and one pound of fresh white helebore to 50 gallons of water.
