A NOVEL exchange of real estate took place in Hanover this week, says the Post. A gentleman in town traded a house and lot he had for a farm in the suburbs, and got to boot one horse nineteen years of age next spring, a top buggy which looks old enough to have been with Noah in the ark, twelve dozen eggs and a peck of plums. The trade hung fire for some time, the owner of the village lot wanting half the farmer's hens. The trade was finally consummated by the farmer throwing in the eggs and keeping the hens.
