An Excited White Man Runs-a-Muck in the Street Revolver in Hand.

An Indian Shot Through the Head and a Chinaman Wounded.

(From our own Correspondent.) VANCOUVER, Sept. 11.—Walter Sangster Dupont street, this atternoon. Gesticu-lating and swearing violently, he made his appearance suddenly in a lane near W. S. Cook's. A Chinaman passing by was knocked down by a vicious blow in the mouth. The ill-treated Chinaman gave the alarm, and, accompanied by three of his Opera Retreat saloon to Carroll street, and into a lane, where Sangster pulled a revolver from his breast pocket, and the Chinamen ran away. Two Indians came over to see what was the matter, and one, Capilano Tom, was seen by Dan McDowell and several others to regist at the revolver in the second quality, and the chinamen ran away. The murderer, evidently in a mad drunk condition, took the Indian for a Chinaman. When Sangster had killed the Indian, he rushed across the road where Dave Brockwell was loading sand, and said: "If you peach on me, I'll put a bullet through you." Another white man who was passing, he seized by the collar and turned him around, exclaiming with an oath: "You're not the kind I'm after." oath: "You're not the kind I'm after."
Reaching the corner of Dupont street, where a crowd of Chinamen were collected round a hand organ, he levelled the revolver and fired into the crowd. The bullet struck the store of Hip Luck Lung, and glancing off, hit on the head of Wang Doo Took, in flicting a severe but not dangerous wound. Everyone on the street, Chinamen and whites, turned and chased men and whites, turned and chased Sangster at a safe distance across lots to Hastings, when they lost sight of him. Chief McLaren appeared shortly after, and, with the help of Contracter Carter, located the murderer, in a stable beyond McKay & Ross' paint shops. The Chief found Sangster crouching in an empty stall, pointing the revolver at the door, but on being commanded to drop the weapon and give himself up, he did so.
