POLITICIANS AND PUBLIC OWNERSHIP.

The World has no doubt that as the course of public ownership makes progress it will be supported by an increasing number of opportunists, politicians who will seek to use it for the purpose of obtaining or retaining power. This is the history of every cause, political, religious and moral. Some of these opportunists may be consciously sincere; a far greater number simply follow the fashion, and exhibit the common human desire to be on the winning side. If a politician adopts protection, or government ownership, or any other cause, not because it is right but because it is popular, his support is valuable as an indication of public opinion, and as a tribute to the sincere convictions of the people.

The Hamilton Times says that this argument does not indicate a high standard of political principle. We are not judging these opportunists one way or the other; the matter is one that they must settle with their own consciences. We are simply dealing with the facts. Very few politicians of either party are entirely free from opportunism; that is, very few advocate or oppose any policy without considering its effect on their own political fortunes or the fortunes of their party. If the Times believes that its own leaders are men who adhere to principles careless of consequences, careless whether those principles will keep them in office or keep them out, it is to be envied for its faith and optimism. The best of politicians give some heed to political consequences of this kind; the worst think of nothing else.

But it is true that public ownership cannot succeed without the force of sincere conviction, whether it be the conviction of public men or of the people. Urging public men forward. Opportunists are effects rather than causes of progress, and their attitude is useful chiefly as an indication of progress. Public ownership has undoubtedly taken a strong hold upon the people, and the people can force the politicians to act. The latter will be judged by their acts, and if they trifle with the question the means of punishment are in the people's hands.

THE RAILWAYS AND THE WATER-FRONT.

The power of expropriation for railway purposes is for the public benefit, and should be used only with that object. It is therefore the duty of the railway commissioners to make the fullest enquiry into the policy of the railway companies on the "Explanatory" they should not be satisfied with the mere assertion of the companies that they need the land, nor with vague talk about a palatial new station. They should pass upon the proposed plans and bind the companies to execute them.

TO ENCOURAGE THE TRAVELING HABIT.

Steam railways have lost a good deal of business to electric railways, since the latter has begun to carry passengers outside of cities. The really significant part of the showing, says The New York Post, is not the traffic lost by the steam railways, but the new business created by the electric lines, seemingly out of nothing. Before the electric railway, the Michigan Central used to carry about 200 passengers a day between Detroit and Ann Arbor, 40 miles away. In its first summer the electric railway carried 400 passengers a day between the same points. The one result of the trolley, which makes every other vanish into the background, is the creation of the traveling habit. It is something which every one has had a chance to study with his own eyes. One cannot board an electric trolley in the outlying districts without encountering persons in abundance, who a few years ago would not have thought of venturing more than a few yards from the farm.

The steam railroads could create business in the same way. They could encourage the traveling habit. It may be that for short distances they cannot rival the electric. Yet the steam railways to-day can beat the electric in speed, convenience and smoothness of running. At all events, for longer distances, they could make business for themselves by coming down to two cents a mile, or even lower. They could fill their cars instead of hauling them half empty, and thus increase their revenues with a very slight increase in running expenses. An additional 50 passengers carried 40 miles at two cents a mile would give the company $40. The extra cost required for hauling the additional weight would be a mere trifle, and the company would have almost the whole $40 to compensate it for the reduction of the fare. An immense bonus would be conferred upon the people without a dollar of loss to the railways, and probably they would make money by the change.

PROFIT IN THE TELEPHONE.

Mr. G. B. Hubbard discusses in "Telephone" the profits of the telephone business. He says that the original investors in the Bell Company have made $20,000 on each $100 invested. To-day the opportunities ought to be still greater, because of the advantages of experience. There are now more than 7000 independent companies, and $200,000,000 has been invested in the construction of independent lines. In the United States there are to-day twice as many subscribers to independent telephone systems as to the Bell. The Bell some time ago resorted to the practice of buying up independent systems. In Toledo they were temporarily successful, but the citizens organized another independent company, which has now 6000 subscribers.

The number of telephones in operation in the United States is now more than 3,200,000, and this is likely to be increased. The telephone is a household convenience, like hot water and gas, and ought to be in use in as many homes as electricity. For many of the benefits of the telephone is no great as to make the expense seem comparatively trifling.

Over a large section of the country one is charged with much to send words by telephone as would enable the business man to get on with the same party by telephone. The telephone is practically instantaneous, while the telegraph message may be delayed for hours. There can be no doubt about the future of the telephone. It would seem that every house, every place of business, and every office containing modern conveniences will soon be provided with telephones as permanent fixtures.

The independent companies have done much to popularize the telephone and bring it into general use, and similar results will follow from the reduction of a price that are sure to come in the next few years.

BRITISH UNIONISTS AND PROTECTION.

From the detailed reports of the annual meeting of the Liberal-Unionist council, which have now come to hand, it is evident that the struggle between the Duke of Devonshire and Mr. Chamberlain, the valiant in the most courteous and mutually appreciative terms, has ultimately involved the identification of that party with the cause of fiscal reform. The story of the proceedings shows also the striking superiority of Mr. Chamberlain as an old political hand. While it was the duke's exclusive aim to preserve the old lines of the Liberal-Unionist organization and the limitation of the subject strictly to protection, which it was constituted he was forced into a position of antagonism to a proposal which sought to bring it into more direct connection with the individual members of the party. For Mr. Chamberlain with his usual tactical skill combined with his motion for reconstitution on democratic lines a new set of rules, which would enable the party to act in that capacity upon other questions than the home rule proposals to which the organization was originally restricted.

Through his presidential valedictory speech the Duke of Devonshire spoke under the shadow of coming defeat. He recognized that Mr. Chamberlain was the master of the situation, and the resolution to reconstitute necessarily carried with it his own withdrawal from office. His address, therefore, was largely justificatory and apologetic. But he did not succeed in explaining away his advice to Liberal-Unionists to vote against Liberal-Unionist candidates where these were supporters of fiscal reform. This advice is now being presented in New York City by an all-star cast, and is playing to capacity houses.

Another revival of a famous play will be given at the Madison Theatre when "The Two Orphans" will be presented by a special company, with new scenery and costumes. The play is now being presented in New York City by an all-star cast, and is playing to capacity houses.

There is every reason to believe that the conservative party at the moment the same result would follow, and that the cleavages developed on the ministerial side of the house of commons is not reproduced in the rank and file throughout the country. Unless indications are greatly heeded, fiscal reform is within measurable distance of becoming the leading plank of the Unionist platform. It will not be a matter of opinion, but of fact, for the general election. In his last speech Mr. Chamberlain showed his full recognition of the unpopularity of the government among the British electorate—an unpopularity which his fiscal proposals were not instrumental in causing, but in which they would share were any measure declared that was not theirs. The consciousness of this strategic position is present in the minds of the free traders and explains their desperate efforts to identify the premier with protection pure and simple. All this sheds a significant light on Mr. Chamberlain's repeated declaration that he is convinced that the future of the country lies in the hands of the people, and that he is not to be trusted with the management of a railway may be relied upon to manage the affairs of a country.

The government of Queensland offers a prize of $25,000 for a method of exterminating the opuntia a species of cactus imported from America. The Prussian State railway system contains 21,000 miles of track, and its passenger lines had in 1903 and 1904, being 10 to 12 per cent. on the investment.

THE NEW ISSUE.

Montreal Star: A political leader is known chiefly by his ability to lead. Some gentlemen who occupy the office of political leader, are content to be party spokesmen, a safe and unexciting policy; but one which seldom leads to success except that the utter collapse of the opposing party. The "leader" of the present government is an example of this sort of man and this kind of success.

But Mr. R. L. Borden has proven himself a leader who leads. He sees that the occasion is ripe in this country for the application of the well-recognized principle of government ownership of railways to the needs of transcontinental transportation. And, seeing it, he has the courage to declare for it.

"Courage" is not here a misplaced word; for it always requires courage for a public leader to stand in front of the marching political forces and unfold a new banner. No man can lead who lacks courage. Sir Robert Borden has proven himself a leader who leads. He sees that the occasion is ripe in this country for the application of the well-recognized principle of government ownership of railways to the needs of transcontinental transportation. And, seeing it, he has the courage to declare for it.
