

Laura Secord Risked Her Life For Her Country---

The perils of a savage and primeval wilderness could not daunt Canada's heroine, Laura Secord.

She toiled her way through twenty miles of pathless, terrifying forest to take her news that meant safety to Lieut. Fitzgibbon's British forces---in that far-away June of 1813. Fitzgibbon and his men escaped the trap that had been spread for them by the superior enemy forces.

Laura Secord's deathless courage against terrible odds--from savage beast, prowling Indian and enemy marauders--saved the day for her country at a time when its fate trembled in the balance. Her magnificent spirit lives today in Canada's womanhood.
