GROW NATIVE TREES.

(Dominion Forestry News Letter)
Some years ago a Canadian forest engineer who was doing some work in the centre of one of the second tier of counties northward from lafe Ontario, met a man who was fencing-in a hundred acre lot. The land was what is commonly known as a pine barren, an area once covered by a pine forest, but since that was clean cut off and burnad over, practically a useless waste. Any farms taken up in the area had been abandoned, and the repeated fires and the running of cattle had up to that time frustrated, although around old trees that had been left clumps of young trees were bravely making a start.

Learning that he was talking to a forest engineer, the man doing the fencentre of the second tier of young trees were bravely making a start.

Learning that he was talking to a forest engineer, the man doing the fencing proceeded to explain that he was a Canadian, who had resided a long time in the United States, and that he had now come back to Canada to try his fortune in growing soft-shelled walnuts on this cheap land. The forest engineer said that growing trees was a good investment, if a long-time one, but he asked, "Why plant soft-shelled walnuts?" "Because Mr. Blank" (naming a celebrated botanist) "personally assured me that they were the most profitable kind of trees. One has yearly ifornia. I do not think he was ever in Ontario, and it is practically certain Ontario, and it is practically certain

"All that is true," said the forest cngineer, "but Mr. Blank lives in California. I do not think he was ever in Ontario, and it is practically certain he was never in this country. Walnuts will grow here, but they are native only along the north shore of lake Eric. That they would really thrive there is doubtful, and that is more particularly true of a special and probably tender variety. This land once grew some of the finest white pine Canada ever produced. In spite of fires and cattle, white pine is struggling, as you see, to cover the ground again; why not grow white pine, when nature is ready

However, the walnut man with his California guarantee was not to be dissuaded. He spent considerable money in planting soft-shelled walnuts, and is now back in the United States at his old job, convinced that forestry is a fraud. In the meantime, the white pine Friday and Saturday is a Bargain Day at The People's Market

Now then. The divider draws off the rich, trebly worked, dough into four separate loaves whose extra weight is double the usual margin against oven evaporation. Next they are tumbled about in a drum that sprinkles a little flour all over and closes the cut ends the same as Mother

BUDOVITCH EROS. Tons of finest quality beef, young and tender, will be cut Friday and Saturday in steak or roast.

what makes good clothes good? Can you distinguish the good from the near good? Can you always spot a price that's too high?

If not then the thing to do is to pick a store that deals only in good clothes, that shows only the approved styles, and that is more interested in giving satisfaction than in merely making sales. Then you'll be safe.
