GERMAN SOLDIERS EAT DEAD HORSES

British Fire Prevents Enemy in Trenches From Getting Food and Munitions

New York, May 13.—The British Military Mission has issued the following statement: Prisoners taken recently vary considerably in morale. While some are convinced they are winning the war, others are depressed by the enormous casualties. The German support trenches with gas shells with marked results. The German concentration has been disturbed and their preparations paralyzed by the effectiveness of the bombardment.

Prisoners from the 190th Division, captured on May 4, said they had been unable to obtain rations since May 1, owing to the constant artillery fire, and that the iron rations carried had gone bad. The regiment appeared to be very much dissatisfied, and prisoners said that desertion was freely talked of. One cannot judge the morale of an army from uncensored letters, as anyone who has had to censor letters from the front knows that men who complain on paper often put up a very fine fight when it comes to the point, and so the following letter, taken from a prisoner on the Amiens front, must not be taken as a typical example of all German letters, although undeniably there are many letters written in the same strain: "We are awaiting the enemy. Nothing arrived—neither food nor munitions. The word of command always is 'Forward tomorrow—and economize.' We have only 42 rounds of ammunition left. In the neighborhood there are 600 dead horses, from which we cut pieces at night. What can one do otherwise? Hunger hurts. I never knew what it was like before."

THE MURDER AT BRANDENBURG

(New York Times.)

The burning alive of seven prisoners of war—one English sailor, one French soldier, and five Russians—in the German prison camp at Brandenburg is officially established. The statements of the British and German governments agree on the fact. The fire was accidental; that is to be assumed. Eye-witnesses assert that when the prison shack took fire the Germans made no attempt to rescue the seven inmates; that they forcibly prevented other prisoners from going to the rescue; and that when the endangered men tried to climb out through the window, a sentry bayoneted them one after the other and they fell back into the flames. The first to suffer in this way was John Genover, an English sailor, and his fate is thus described in a memorandum drawn up by eight Spanish sailors who saw it: "Those inside the dungeon were being choked. The Englishman broke the panes of a small window with the idea of freeing himself and his companions. The sentry, seeing him leaning out of the window, gave him a tremendous thrust in the chest. The wounded man fell like lead. A small but revolting struggle then took place. The prisoners attempted to get out, and the German soldier bayoneted his bayonet again and it did when it officially assured the president of the United States that its submarine did not sink the Sussex.

So say the Spanish sailors. An English prisoner of war, who tells the same story, adds that after the bayoneting of Genover "a rush forward was made to break the place open, but we were driven off by other armed Germans who had arrived on the scene." Another eye-witness says that when he and other prisoners attempted to go to the rescue "they placed a cordon of German soldiers at a distance of sixty yards around the cells, with rifles loaded and fixed bayonets, so that we could not get near." The German government, while admitting the death of Genover from fire, denies the other allegations. The German government's word on any subject is worth nothing unless uncontradicted. In this case it is contradicted by the testimony of eye-witnesses; of the eight Spanish sailors taken from the Gravin, and of two prisoners of war. It will be assumed by everybody that the eight
