O LOVE, IF LOVE WERE LOVE. O Love, if love were love as thou With sweet sad note of woo hast sung, "Twere death indeed that thou hadst clung To love's delusions—vanished now.

Twere death to find the one fond hope Which once was all life had for thee, The only star to light the sea The men call time, o'er which we grope. The sea of Time, a tossing tide
That tears apart the clos.st bound,
And makes experience seem a round
—Of shattered joys, of smitten pride— Of sunken lights that once were near, Ot stifled voices, which, when heard, The heart's remotest depths astirred— To guide the way, our gloom to cheer.

But Love, if love be love as Life
May prove—as those with wider scope
Who see the sky, cloud-cast, of hope
Declare; nor find a bootless strife; 'Twere well to watch for other light,
Nor always mourn an empty cloud—
Light-fraught, star-seeming, yet the shroud
Of love's first death—now gone from sight, Sweet stars, O Love, o'er Life's dark sea Shall rise. Time s bitterest gloom shall grow Alive with kindling light; and so Shall dawn the day, Eternity,

The star of passion, love's first light,
Has fad.d. Who, O Sweet, shall know
If other spheres at last may glow
With holier radiance on thy sight? NOTES AND NEWS.
