Weekly War Summary

DURING the past week, as during every preceding week since the Allied armies began the work of carrying out Marshal Foch's plans for driving the German armies out of France and Belgium, news of the successful carrying out of that great work has come and continues to arrive most satisfactorily.

Among the many eminently satisfactory incidents in the great drive none has afforded livelier satisfaction to every friend of freedom and justice in the world than the success of the Belgians last Saturday in heading off 15,000 of the retreating Germans, who, to escape capture or destruction, fled across the boundary line into Holland, where they have been interned by the Dutch military authorities. The day before, the King and Queen of Belgium entered Bruges, which had been in the possession of the Germans since the first month of the war, thus signaling the liberation of the entire coastal portion of Belgium from German occupation.

With that great improvement in the situation, the question whether the Germans would be able to make any strong attempt to hold the line of the river Scheldt, running from Tournai to Ghent, came to the fore. There seems very good ground for believing as these lines are being written, that Tournai on the eve of being taken by the British, while the French and Americans, whose advance upon the other end of that line, the Germans, despite their utmost efforts, have been unable to withstand, are forcing their way ahead with great rapidity.

In northern Serbia the Serbs and French continue to advance in territory which prevents formidable difficulties for military operations; they have captured Kniajevatz, north-east of Nish (the capture of which cut the Berlin-to-Constantinople railway) and are now on the summit of the watershed between the valleys of the Morava and the Danube.

The anxiety with regard to the Czech-Slovaks operating in the Volga region, who were reported in dire need of assistance, has been relieved by the news of their successes over strong forces of Bolshevik troops.

The news from Turkey continues to make it increasingly manifest that Turkey, which has followed Bulgaria in suing for a separate peace, has, like Bulgaria, abandoned all hope of Germany winning the war. Reports from Berlin convey threats of a bombardment of Constantinople by the German warships which fled from the Mediterranean and took refuge at the Golden Horn soon after the beginning of the war.

The German government is continuing its endeavors to draw the Allied governments into negotiations, with a view to securing an armistice; but is meeting with no success in those endeavors.
