

BATHURST NEWS.

Rumor of Purchase of Flour Mill.

PERSONAL MENTION.

Other Items of Interest From The Gloucester Shire-town.

BATHURST, July 27.—Mr. George Chalmers, night operator at Bathurst, was married this afternoon to Miss Mary Branch, daughter of Mr. Robert Branch. The nuptial knot was tied by Rev. H. P. Reid in the presence of immediate friends and the newly married couple left by the Ocean Limited to visit Quebec, Montreal and other points West.

We understand that Mr. John P. Legere proposes to establish a grist mill and carding mill in Bathurst Village, which will be run by motor power from the electric light plant. A report is current that Mr. Legere is negotiating for the purchase of the Madisco flour mills at Petit Rocher operated by S. Desbrisay, and that the machinery used in this plant is to be transferred to Bathurst Village.

The topic of conversation during the week has been the transferring of the Caraque Railway Co. to a Toronto Syndicate who now control the management of this road. About twenty-five or thirty persons are joining the excursion to St. Anne de Beaupre. The train passes here about eight o'clock Wednesday evening and will return on Saturday, July 30th.

Dr. R. G. Duncan, drove to Caraque on a sick call Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Dumas of Grandansee were registered at the Robertson Hotel this week.

Mr. Dennis Landon of Bathurst Village died on Monday morning, July 25th, aged 29 years. His funeral was to the Holy Family Church cemetery Wednesday morning and was largely attended.

Mrs. Chas. Landry returned to her home in Bathurst Village last week after spending a month with her parents at Grand Anse.

Some of our farmers have commenced haying and we trust they will be favored with plenty of sunshine. A few mackerel are being taken at the points. Our fishermen entertain hopes that the catch will improve and be of some consequence this season.

Mr. Godfrey Ellis spent a few days in Sussex while relieved from duty as Assistant Station Agent at Bathurst last week.

Miss Aggie Melanson is visiting Drummondville, P. Q.

Messrs. John P. Legere and H. A. Melanson returned by the Ocean Limited Tuesday morning from Quebec where they sojourned over Sunday.

GASPE DESCRIBED.

Some Facts about Land's End-of Canada.

FISHING INDUSTRY.

The Symbol of Christian Faith Planted First in Gaspé

Canada has its Land's End as well as England. It must not be taken, however, that Gaspé is the extreme portion of Canada, for Cape Breton has that distinction; but the word "Gaspé" means Land's End, and the name first given has remained ever since. As it is Gaspé is the extreme point of Canadian territory between the St. Lawrence and the Bay of Chaleur, and the peninsula, occupying a somewhat unique position, with also a peculiar form, is one of the most interesting regions in Canada.

Gaspé to-day, says a writer in the Toronto Globe, is known for chiefly two things, the famous Perce rock and—fish. The whole Gaspé shore is fisherman's country, and the seat of the cod-fishing industry. From a scenic point of view however the great attraction is Perce Rock, that peculiar formation which juts out into the gulf in two pieces, and one of them strangely tunnelled. Around the corner from Perce, some 10 miles north, is Gaspé Bay, which extends for 26 miles further, till it ends in Gaspé Basin. This basin is one of the finest havens in America, and the surrounding scenery is very grand. It was here that the first symbol of the Christian faith in Canada was planted, by Jacques Cartier in 1534. At the head of the basin is the village of the same name, which is likely to become better known to the outside world, now that the long talked of extension of the railway is about to become a reality. It is a pretty little hamlet, with a population of several hundred, and a favourite summer resort.

Three well-known salmon rivers the St. John, York, and Dartmouth flow into the sea, and are annually visited by many American anglers. There is the finest sea-trout fishing in the immediate vicinity and the off-chance of a salmon or two in free water at the proper season. The basin, from which the village takes its name, is a land-locked sheet of salt water, deep enough for a man-of-war. Numerous oil wells have been bored in the country adjacent, and while none of them has produced oil in paying quantities, there is no doubt it will be a producing point sooner or later. The harbor is open well on into December, or even January.

Fishing is the great industry. In and around the Bay of Gaspé each season 1,000 men go out upon the waters and return day by day, until the results of their toil are seen in the millions of lbs. of cod, credited to this portion of the shores. The cod taken between Perce and Cape des Rosiers in an average year will make over 3,000,000 lbs. of dried fish, while the annual value of all the fisheries in that limit is over $200,000. In these may be included some 100,000 lbs. of fresh salmon in ice, and a like quantity of canned lobsters. These figures it must be remembered, apply only to the small stretch of shore around this part of the peninsula. They represent only about one-third of the results of the Gaspé fisheries in these particular lines, not including the returns of the outlying district of the Magdalen Islands, which belong to Gaspé County.

Great as is the fishing industry in the Gaspé waters, the resources of the rivers in the interior of the peninsula provide, from a sportsman's point of view, a still greater attraction. Of the rare pleasure of salmon fishing as it may be enjoyed in the streams of Gaspé, an Ontario sportsman writes as follows: "Just above tide water on the St. John (Gaspé) there is a pool much frequented by salmon—the Whirlpool—it is often fished, but seldom failing when cast over. One day we were going up the river after trout, a rickety reel, with only a few yards of line and a frayed fairy fly at the end of it. When we reached the Whirlpool the salmon were there as usual, and in such a position that we could put the fly right over them with every cast. They were evidently in a very finicky mood; for though we almost exhausted the fly book for them, they calmly ignored our best endeavour. The little fellow meanwhile was whipping the water a few feet from shore with his old fairy, when a salmon darted in, seized the fly made a quick rush away, and took all the line, leaving the youngster gaping with astonishment. That was the only salmon that rose that day for anybody. It is the dream of almost every fisherman to catch a salmon, but most of them are under the impression that it is a tremendously expensive operation. So it is under ordinary conditions, but it is possible to have good sport on water that is free or nearly so. All streams are free as far as the tide reaches, subject only to the permission of the owner of the adjoining lands, if one fishes from the shore. In most of the Canadian waters there is free or unleased water for some distance above the tide. This is the case on the Restigouche, in New Brunswick, one of the very best salmon rivers in the world.

Most of the Restigouche, with its tributaries, the Matapedia, Causapscal, Upsalquitch, and other smaller streams, are controlled by the Restigouche Salmon Club, an association composed of millionaires mostly, who come in palace cars, and live in luxury at the club house at Matapedia. Five dollars a pound would be a low average for the fish caught by these gentlemen. Much fun can be had for less money.

A Mcg McDonald will refund your money if you are not satisfied after using Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. It is everywhere admitted to be the most successful remedy in use for bowel complaints and the only one that never fails. It is pleasant, safe and reliable.

MANNERS IN BUSINESS.

Brains and Good Deportment a Winning Combination.

The value of brains in business cannot be overestimated, of course; but neither can the value of manners. Don't make the error of supposing that brains are everything. You may have the best set of brains in the town, but if you haven't the manners of a gentleman nobody is going to appreciate you. Your manner is the outward indication of what you are within in the estimate of most people, and if the manner is disagreeable few will take the trouble to examine into you any further.

The consensus of general opinion is that the man who goes about with a pompous gait as his manners haven't any brains worth boasting about. Did you never notice that the men who employ large forces of intelligent people look at an applicant closely, ask a few seemingly unimportant questions, and properly employ him? They don't mind his brain; they mind his manners. They don't mind his brain; they mind his manners. They don't mind his brain; they mind his manners.

The employer knows that if an applicant's manner strikes him favorably, he will also favorably strike people with whom he comes in contact in his work. And nobody knows better than a big business man that a favorable first impression means half the sale. People are apt to think that if there is any place where manners are of little consequence it is in business, where cold calculation so largely takes the place of feeling. But the truth is that nowhere else are manners of such importance as in everyday dealings. There is no capital and equipment any young man can have that will pay him better than good manners. There is no possible calling for which this does not better fit him. If he has brains the world owes him something, but unless he has good manners he will have a hard time collecting it.

A WHISTLER PICTURE.

The Dramatic Manner of His Finish and an Anticlimax.

Whistler was one day visited by a foreign artist, an old acquaintance, with whom Whistler had not as yet quarreled. He was received with genuine cordiality, and, artist-like, he ran round the studio looking at everything. One small picture seemed to charm him especially, and he said, "Now that is one of your good ones." "Don't look at it, dear boy," said Whistler airily, "it's not finished." "Finished?" said the visitor. "Why, it is the most carefully finished picture of yours that I have ever seen." "Don't look at it!" persisted Whistler. "You are doing injustice to yourself, you are doing injustice to my picture, and you are doing injustice to me!" The visitor looked bewildered, when Whistler, in a theatrical tone, cried out: "Stop! I'll finish it now!" Then he procured a few small camel's hair brush, fixed it on a long and slender handle, mixed a little speck of paint on his palette, dipped the tip of his brush into it, and then, standing off from his picture and with the action of a fencer with his rapier, he lunged forward and touched the picture in one spot with his pigment.

"Now it's finished," said he. "Now you may look at it." This was all highly dramatic, and indeed very well acted, but as in the case of some stage plays, the final act of Whistler's performance proved to be an anticlimax. The foreign artist took his leave, but, finding that he had left his umbrella behind him, called for it next day. The servant, recognising him, told him that Mr. Whistler had gone out for the day, but invited him to go to the studio and seek his umbrella. He went there and found it, but also took the opportunity of having one more look at the picture which had been "finished" for his special benefit the day before, and then he saw that the little dab of wet paint which Whistler had so dramatically put on he had afterward scrupulously wiped off again—Frederick Keppel in The Reader.

WITH THE SAGES.

I take him to be the only rich man that lives upon what he has, owes nothing, and is contented; for there is no determinate sum of money, nor quantity of estate, that can denote a man rich, since no man is truly rich that has not so much as perfectly satisfies his desire of having more; for the desire of more is want, and want is poverty.—Howe.

Repentance hath a purifying power, and every tear is of a cleansing virtue; but these penitential clouds must be still kept dropping; one shower will not suffice; for repentance is not one single action, but a course.—South.

People of gloomy, uncheerful imaginations, or of envious, malignant tempers, whatever kind of life they are engaged in, will discover their natural picture of mind in all their thoughts, words and actions.—Addison.

The grand and, indeed, the only character of truth, is its capability of enduring the test of universal experience, and coming unchanged out of every possible form of fair discussion.—Sir John Herschel.

New blessings light on him that first invented sleep; it covers a man all over, thoughts and all like a cloak; it is meat for the hungry, drink for the thirsty, knit for the cold, cold for the hot.—Cervantes.

Sorrow is a kind of rust of the soul, which every new idea contributes in its passage to scour away. It is the putrefaction of stagnant life, and is remedied by exercise and motion.—Johnson.

Instability of temper ought to be checked when it disposes men to wander from one scheme to another; since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences.—Addison.

It is another's fault if he be ungrateful, but it is mine if I do not give. To find one thankful man I will oblige many that are not so.—Seneca.

Those who are surly and imperious to their inferiors, are generally humble, flattering, and cringing to their superiors.—Fuller.

When a man has not a good reason for doing a thing, he has one good reason for letting it alone—Sir Walter Scott.

Sorrow seems sent for our instruction, as we darken the cages of birds when we would teach them to sing.—Richter.

The most delicate, the most sensible of all pleasures, consists in promoting the pleasures of others.—La Bruyere.

Nothing is so hard for those who abound in riches, as to conceive how others can be in want.—Swift.
