Love Finds the Way

Lilian looked after him for a moment,

As she had said, it was a beautiful As she had said, it was a beautiful spot; the birds were singing melodiously; the shaded light fell softly on the meas; the tutor's voice, always low-pitched and musical, had chimed in with the air and beauty of the place. Now it had ceased, she felt—she was half conscious rather—that something was missing. The melody was broken, the harmony was a note, a chord wanting. Her eyes wandering dreamily round fell on the book, she took it up and turned over the pages idly. Then naturally looked curiously at the flyleaf. Her curiosity was rewarded but poorly. The page bore a very slight inscription, simply:

"To Cli."

"Cli," she repeated. "It is short and For politeness" sake, and to take from away.

He resumed his seat and his book, away.

He resumed his seat and his book, but the former was hard and uncomfortable, and the latter less beautiful than he had pronounced it, for he threw it down with a gesture of uncasiness, and took to pacing across the moss, backwards and forwards as he paced the gallery at the Hall.

When Mr. Clifford, the following evening, entered the drawing room he found it occupied by a stranger—a young gentleman, with a good-looking but rather insipid face, fair hair and blue but rather unmeaning eyes, and a gentlemanly bearing.

He was standing with his hands in his pockets, looking at the pictures, and turned as Mr. Clifford entered, expecting to see Sir Raiph.

He bowed, and the salutation was returned.

"Fine evening," he commenced. "Been a capital day for the hounds if it was

He looked him up and down critically, and shook his head decisively.

"You should hunt," he said, "you're made for it. This country's a rough un, wants a showy-made fellow, neat about the pastern. Now you—"

What the gentleman considered Mr. Clifford to be was to remain a mystery, for Sir Ralph entered with Lilian on his arm as an interruption.

"Ah, my dear Harry, how do you do?" he said, shaking hands, at which Miss Lilian followed suit.

"Let me introduce you—Mr. Clifford, Mr. Harry Besant."

The gentlemen bowed again, this time with more formality.

"And how are the hounds?" asked Lilian, from her chair.

"Capital, first-rate condition," replied Mr. Besant, with ready enthusiasm. "We shall have a fine pack, this season, Sir Kalph. I wish we could get Miss Melville to follow."

"Oh, I baven't the courage," said Lilian. "I am afraid the moment I hear them tonguing."

"Nonsense!" retirted Mr. Besant, "You've got quite as much pluck as the Warner girls, and see how they ride."

Lilian's lip curled slightly, and there was a twinkle in her eyes.

"Ah, you are mistaken," she said. 'Ask papa."

Sir Ralph shook his head and amiled.

Sir Ralph shook his head and smiled.

"How did you come over, Harry!"

"So." thought the tutor, "Mr. Harry Besant lives within ten miles of Rivershall," and with the thought he glanced at the sweet, girlish face before him.

"That's quick," said Sir Ralph. Then turning to Mr. Clifford, "I don't know whether you ride, Mr. Clifford?"

Mr. Clifford hesiated.

"No," he said, "I do not ride."

"Can't understand that," said Mr. Besant, with genuine astonishment.

With a slight darkening of the brow, he took a longer look at the fair, insipid

But the conversation came his way, and, with a start, he exerted himself. He could not ride, but he knew something of the horse, it was evident. Much to Mr. Besant's delight he could enumerate the various Arabian breeds, tell the heights and capabilities of the Spanish roan, and the Hungarian sheltie, and knew more of the physique and proper training of the animal than Mr. Besant himself.

"While you are resting I will go in search of Miss Lucas," he said, and this time Lllian did not detain him—indeed, she seemed to have forgotten that she ad ever refused to permit him.

He left his book on the tree and pushed into the undergrowth.

Lilian looked after him for a moment starce.

"It is ridiculous." he said, "to find fault with the display of my flag. I ran it up as a mark of respect to the United States. I have done the same thing many times in Boston, New York and other American ports, and no complaint was made. SHOOTS EIGHT MEN.

An Armed Ex-Convict Defies an Oregon Posse.

Ione, Oregon, July 3 .- Eight men, including Postmaster E. T. Perkins, were shot here to-day in a battle between a sheriff's posse and T. G. Earheart, said sheriff's posse and T. G. Earheart, said to be an ex-convict. W. H. Escue, an aged man of Portland, was shot, perhaps fatally, by members of a posse by mistake, and Earheart was wounded in the back after having shot six of his pursuers. None of the victims, with the exception of Escue, is seriously wounded. Earheart surrendered to the posse after his ammunition was exhausted, and was taken to Heppner.

Earheart quarreled with E. E. Miller, on whom he is alleged to have drawn a knife. Earheart afterwards, it is stated, broke into a store and stole a shotgun and a quantity of ammunition. Meanwhile Deputy Sheriff Cason gathered a posse and called on Earheart to surrender. The reply was a shot, and then Earheart started to run. The posse fired several dozen shots after the fleeing man, who returned the fire.

Earheart took refuge under a warehouse, whence he fired at his pursuers, hitting several. Escue, who had been sleeping on the ground nearby, arose and some members of the posse mistook him for Earheart and fired at him, inflicting injuries from which he may die.

When Earheart's ammunition was ex-for Earneart and fired at him, interior injuries from which he may die.

When Earneart's ammunition was exhausted he surrendered. He appeared to have been drinking, and he said that he believed a conspiracy was on foot to sureder him.

Mr. Clifford bowed gratefully.

"May we trespass on your good nature for another?" said Sir Ralph.

"Certainly," said the tutor, taking this as fully a command as the other As he played the symphony the door opened, and Miss Lucas, who had dined in her own perthent, that day and not

Mr. Besant found his voice by the time the song was concluded, and drowned Sir Ralph's encomiums with his: "Splendid, by Jove! Never heard anything like it, except at the opera." Lillian rose and walked over to her companion. She had not thanked him by word or look, and he knew it. "What a recluse you are Kate!" she said; "what have you been doing all the evening?"

"Writing some letters, my dear," replied the monotonous voice.
This reminded Mr. Clifford that he and knew more of the physique and proper training of the animal than Mr. Besant himself.

Sir Ralph was surprised.

Lilian might have been, but she did not look it.

Mr. Besant was charmed. His opinion of the quiet gentleman went up twenty.

"Yes," said Sir Ralph, who did not like anything in which he had a proprietorship to be carelessly praised or

A handsome brochure, artistically illustrated, has been issued by the passenger department of the Grand Trunk Railway system, telling of the beauties of the Lake of Bays district in the "Highlands of Ontario." A new feature of this district is the new hotel—the Wawa—at Norway Point. The hotel it self has a page illustration reflecting the summer glories of woodland and water, with a brood of seven wild geese soaring skyward beyond the tower. The concise description embodies the story of a charming resort. A copy can be obtained free on application to J. D. McDonald, D. P. A., Toronto.
