The President's Meesage

Washington, Dec. 9.—The President, in his message to Congress, opens by referring to the non-representation of Virginia, Mississippi and Texas, in Congress. After a fair trial, he says, the reconstruction acts have substantishly failed. He also goes on to say briefly that experience has demanded the repeal of the Civil Tenure Bill. He recommends that the Act of March 2nd, 1887, depriving the President for power to-hisse military orders, except through any hoadquarters, be repealed, also all ether chancions laws restricting exacutive powers. He recommends that the Act of March 2nd, 1867, depriving the President of power to his me military orders, except through any headquarters, be repealed, also all other obnoxious laws restricting exacutive powers. The message reviews Secretary McCulloch's report, and speaks at length of the finances, substantially in the same vein as the report. He regrets the evils of a depreciated currency, the seconsity of a return to speek payments, and enderses the main propositions of the finance report. The President there is a resume of the annual reports, and calls attention to the recommendations therein. On foreign affairs the President make but slight reference to the negotiations for the extlement of the Alabyms claims. In

On foreign affairs the President maves but slight reference to the negotiations for the settlement of the Alabama claims. In apeaking of the Paraguayan difficulty, the President details the late outrage on Americans, and adds that the new minister has been instructed to investigate the whole subject.

How to Get Rich.—We commend the remarks of a business can be our mercantile readers, "that a metchant had just as well except to get rich by clusing his doors and leeping his goods concealed from public view, as to hope to succeed in the world without advertising, while his contemporaries are continually exhibiting their stocks to the public gase, and inviting their stocks to the public gase, and inviting their stocks who advertise in it, as it is for chirdren, to follow soldiers when on parade. The simple fact of seeing certain goods published, has an irresistible attraction that will fasten itself upon the mind, and mover falls to guide each reader to the very store at which his or her wants can be at once supplied. Every merchant knows it to be so; and yet many of them fail to resort to the very method to make sales which is used to induce them to make the purchases.
