ere were 400 people here from Buffalo last Sunday. A reporter of the Telegraph was among them and he epitomizes his impressions of Sunday in Toronto as follows: Toronto lies widespread behind a long stretch of low, sandy island, that has here and there sprouted groves as if to hide the nodest beauty that has taken refuge behind Whether this is the fact, or the barrier is only a shallow device to compel vessels to side and then pass in review along the shore, is not yet explained. The arrangement at least gave the party more of Toronto than it found in its two hours on shore, and the inventor of the situation is forgiven of his labryinthine ways. they were not long in finding that it was out here in full force. There were plenty of people about the wharf, even the modest march led past the Great Western dep.t; all silent, no screeching switch engine, no life about the station; even the restaurant was found open, standing as if on tip toe for fear a pin would drop and make a noise. Farther up, shops, people passing quietly, carriages rolling almost unheard over the wooden pavement, but no business life. One might watch a brace of policemen for an hour, and never run down a saloon by the observation. Street railways everythe observation. Street railways every-where but no travel. It is Sunday, and

A trifle of sameness, perhaps, but so there is in dress hats and there is the same dignity in effect. One would smile perhaps to learn that the "Waterloo house" sold "faces and embroid-ery," and that so and so chooses to be ery, and that so and so chooses to be known as the "butcher, etc.," instead of passing as the keeper of a meat market, An hour does not disclose a city, and no attempt is made here to pose Toronto for

NOBLE STRUCTURES, outwardly, at least, and not pieced off among a struggling row of saloons and shops, but each in a square of its own. with entrances from different streets and flowers and shrubbery to lenote its separateness from secular affairs. A large part of the town is built of gray brick, which gives it a sober, though stately look, and is not out of keeping with the general air of the place. The many fine faces observed in the streets may have taken something of their ladylike though unpretentious composure from the steady hued structures, and it may have all been a reflection, for outside effect only, and taken on for effect. But Toronto is not all Sabbath. If she
