better to call her 'Rose'; to my mind she is just like a full-blown, glorious red rose,' said the Captain a little enthusiastically.

'Perhaps we had better come back to our discussion upon your daughter, John, and leave other people's daughters alone,' returned Mrs. Challacombe in an acrimonious tone. 'And you had better drop those gardening tools, and put a decent coat upon your back, and go and call upon young Davenant, to inquire how he is after his accident. Then ask him here to dinner this evening, and I'll make an opportunity for you to speak to him, and for him to speak to Lilian, and we will get this busicess finished and off our minds.'

The Captain gave a lingering look at his geraniums.

'Do you think there is any need for so much hurry, Lucy?'

'Yes, I do. Can you tell me where your daughter is at this minute, Captain Challacombe?'

'No, I can't, my dear.'

'The I can. She is on the rocks—

Moslem population of that part of the Empire was not one-half as numerous as the Christians. One effect of the Crimean war was to hasten the exodus, and long reaches of shadow were flitting to and fro, mingling with broad beams of sunny glare, a figure stood like a tall, urright, and lovely flower looking on the sea. A poet might have called her a lily, she was so fair and beautiful; and on her young and wistful face there rested that tender white shade of melancholy which snowy flowers wear, as though they were to frail to live long in the rough wind of a hard world.

Seated on a great rock, with the waves glistening all around her like a glassy sea, was a child-figure whom the sun had touched with his own warmth and glory. Poetry.

Life is but a tangled skein, Full of trouble, toil, and travail. Knots that puzzle heart and brain, We must study to unravel :

Bending lowly
O'er our task and trusting wholly Unto Him, whose loving hand Helps us to smooth each twisted strand,

Lockett,

In our hands at early morn,
And at night when darkness lingers,
Still the distaff must be borne,
While the thread slips through our finger
Lightly, lightly, Twisting tightly

> He who lacks of skill or thought Is an awkwardness betraying, Will the lines of grace distort By the friction surely fraying Thread so tender, Fine and slender. ands accused as an offender, And himself alone must blame

For the knots that cause him shame. Some may wind a silken thread, Who, in addition to Serving a Soft and smooth and beautiful, Others flax may hold instead, Of the coarse and shaggy wool

But if ever From the stains of sin to sever We may weave them bright and fair In the robes that angels wear.

Life's a complex skein indeed Full of trouble, toil, and travail, More than human help we need

All its mases to unravel.

Slowly, slowly,
Bending lowly O'er our task, and trusting wholly In God's love we patience gain As we wind the tangled skein.

Romance of a Watering Place.

HOW A BOATMAN WON AN HEIRESS. The Rye Beach correspondent of the New York Commercial tells this story: 'The great topic of conversation at the hotels at Rye Beach this week is the engagement of Miss Sarah Brown, a beautiful young Pennsylvanian and heiress as well, to Mr. Robert G. Miller, the son of a Rye Beach fisherman, and himself nothing more than a skipper of one of the hotel yachts which are rented for excursions by hotel guests. Miss Brown was one of a party that of one of the hotel yachts which are rented for excursions by hotel guests. Miss Brown was one of a party that made several trips on the yacht which young Robert 'skippered' and Robert saw a great deal of her, and went dead in love with her, though, of course, mindful of the great disparity of their social positions, he kept the secret of his love to himself, contenting himself with paying her extraordinary attention during her trips on his boat. As for Sarah, she was extremely courteous to him. That was all. Well, the catastrophe that led to the engagement happened like this:—

The trips on the yacht which you have the heads of the front door. The doctor put up the window and beheld a delegation of about fifty half dressed neighbors, with four police officers in their midst. 'Is he dead yet?' said one of the crowd as the doctor poked his head out.

'Is who dead? said the latter much astonished.

'Why, your brother, down there in the cellar. Didn't you tell us your brother had made a big strike in stocks and was coming in to stay with you

An Enthusiastic Doctor's Trouble.

San Francisco Evening Post.] Old Dr. Potts, who lives out on Mi sion street and who is an enthusiast in his profession, is the originator of the theory that much disease is transmit-ted to human beings through eating the flesh of immature animals, such as calves, in the early spring. The doctor poison thereby assimilated is transfer maintains that the young animals, in their inexperience, eat greedily of certain noxious weeds and that the red to the blood of the consumer of the animal's flesh. As this assertion was disputed by some of his contemporary M. D's., Dr. Potts determined to make some useful experiments accordingly purchased a six month's calf-one of the kind that appear to be built on stilts—and as the doctor had no backyard to speak of, he had the brevet cow placed in the cellar, where he proposed to mix the weeds in question among its food for a few days prior to its being converted into test cutlets, so to speak. The China boy was bribed not to mention the calf's presence to the other members of the household, who, it happened, had been absent while the quadruped was being secret-ly let down through the coal hole by the butcher. To prevent its bleating the doctor wedged a stout leather muzzle on its nose.

That night the docter was awakened by Mrs. Potts, who sat up in bed and gasped in a horror struch voice: 'Gracious heavens! Archibald, don't you hear that singular noise down stairs? The calf had evidently got the muzzle about half off and was making a peculiar sound, resembling a small fog horn tortured by remorse, but old Potts stammered out that he couldn't hear anything in particular.

'Not hear anything, Dr Potts? Are you deaf? Just listen to that! It's perfectly blood curdling.

'Perhaps it's rats,' hazarded the miserable physician. Rats, Dr. Potts? Are you insane? The Rye Beach correspondent of the Did you ever hear rats wailing like a

'Explain yourself,' cried the excited women.

So the doctor explained how Robert had fallen from his horse when about were three bears and a dog in one of the cages. It is well known that the his injuries.

A shop was broken into one night; but, strange to say, nothing was carried off. The proprietor was making his boast of it, at the same time expressing his surprise at losing nothing. 'Not at all surprising,' said his neighbor; 'The robbers lighted a lamp, didn't they?' 'Yes,' was the reply. 'Well, continued the neighbor, 'they found your goods marked up so high they couldn't afford to take them.'

A man who was kept awake hour after hour by the barking of a dog, said he never wanted to use a shot-gun so bad in his life. 'What for, to shoot the dog?' asked a friend. 'No,' he replied,' but to shoot the fool whody's honest bark.'

A victim of domestic infelicity, who is in the habit of dreaming, should never go to sleep in church, A congregation near Quincy was somewhat startled last Sunday when a venerable member excitedly yelled, 'Here, now, drop that skillet, old woman!'
