The Tests of a Good Flour.

The text book on Hygiene prescribes, for use in our public schools, says of flour: It should be white or only tinged with yellow. It should not feel gritty or lumpy. Its smell and taste should be neither acid nor mouldy. If a handful is compressed, it should not re-open on the hand, fall too readily into powder; this would indicate adulteration or a deficiency of gluten. It is worthy of note that when these tests are applied to "Ogilvie's" flour, they prove it to be unadulterated flour, and as a matter of fact, "Ogilvie's" consists of nothing but what's best of the wheat.

King Edward Visits the Humble Dwellers at Dublin.

MADLY CHEERED BY THE MULTITUDE.

London, July 25.—King Edward yesterday paid the Dublin shire a visit which will long be remembered. He was to be housed by the official programme, he went from one tenement dweller and maintaining a real interest in their welfare.

As he walked through those streets, hat in hand, the enthusiasm of the people knew no bounds. It had been arranged that the King should visit two of the corporation tenements, but this did not satisfy His Majesty, and to the astonishment of all, he pursued his investigations in a thoroughgoing fashion.

A noteworthy incident occurred as the King was leaving St. Patrick's Cathedral on his way to the slums. An old woman struggled through the dense crowd which had gathered at the entrance and reaching forth her right hand endeavored to get close to the King, her intention evidently being to shake hands. Several officials were about to push her away, when His Majesty interposed, saying: "Leave her alone, God bless her."

With a fervent, "God bless your Majesty," the old woman then kissed the King, who shook her hand warmly.

In the course of his rounds the King called on a man who had been out of work eight months, and gave him a five pound note. After visiting one tenement house the King walked quietly from the street into another tenement, and up a narrow alley leading to a court, where he spent several minutes. When he reappeared the crowd of poor people in the street outside rushed forward and cheered him again and again.

Along Westing street the narrow pavement just permitted His Majesty and Sir Charles Canon to walk side by side. In their wake came Mr. Wyndham and Lord Dudley. Other members of His Majesty's suite followed.

The poor folks of the neighborhood crowded along the path, cheering continuously. Children, too, little bare-legged, hatless and unwashed, who never had seen a royal king, passed by their gutter playground, joined in the demonstration, while from windows and doorways men and women shouted a chorus of "God luck to ye."

As for the King, his smiling face told unmistakably how much he sympathized with what he saw, and how delighted he was with the reception by some of the poorest of his subjects.

Presently His Majesty turned up in a close, his object being to visit certain tenements erected over shop property, and having access only from the rear. Residents of the close came in to see him, and again the welcome was rapturous and heartfelt.

King Edward entered several tenements, conversing freely with the occupants and putting them quickly at their ease.

When the King stepped into a room occupied by Joseph Healy, he found Healy at his occupation of boot making. Healy, subsequently giving an account of the visit, said:

"I was partly going on with a pair of boots when the King came in, but of course he did not mind working-man at his work. I said he was very much obliged to His Majesty for visiting a poor man's room. The King replied pleasantly that he was very glad indeed to come."

Mrs. Healy's estimate of the sovereign was simple, but expressive. "He's a very nice gentleman," she said.

His Majesty in the course of his examination of the room passed over a memorial picture in green and black of the late Queen Victoria. Satisfactorily, he observed the portrait of the commander-in-chief of the British army. He said: "There is my old friend, Roberts."

On leaving the slum area, the King received a hearty send-off from the inhabitants.

Traveling Close to the Wind.

On the subject of tourist travel last Friday's Spectator, says:

"The tourist season, to date, so far as western Nova Scotia is concerned, and this includes both Annapolis Royal and Digby—is a decided failure, compared with other years. A few straggling tourist parties have been doing the province, but the money advanced in most cases is gold-piled up by the imitators of the Raymonds and Cooks and the glib tourist has to take what is coming to him or return home. One of these parties, whose tickets called for a day in Annapolis Royal, were the victims one day last week of a deal like the above. Lunches were served for 10c. per head at Digby, and the tourists took passage on the Bluenose, landing here at 12.15. The garbison, the happy hunting ground of many, was their destination, and although the promoter of the enterprise secured reasonable rates from the hotels here the day previous, he somehow convinced the party he could not afford more than a luncheon for them. One of the hotel proprietors was approached as to the price of a gallon of coffee. Recognizing the absurdity of refusing such gain, the coffee was produced. A request for cups and saucers was next in order, also cheerfully given. The chances are that several of the party are writing a 'History of Nova Scotia, as Viewed by Impartial Eyes.'

Retrenchments on the Dominion Iron and Steel Co.

The George's River quarry works of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company were closed down Saturday for the summer, as a consequence of which over 300 men are thrown out of work. These quarries are working only when it is impossible to secure dolomite from Marble Mountain, the company's principal source of supply, as in winter time. Of the open hearth plant, seven of the furnaces have been closed, three only being kept going. About two hundred men, mostly laborers and handy men, have been laid off. The company has about twenty thousand tons of steel billets on hand now, awaiting shipment. The Herald correspondent learns that the company proposes to make considerable retrenchment in the way of superintendents and clerks who are paid high salaries and have not much work to perform.

Romance in Windsor.

The marriage of Victor Hughes and Miss Lou Foster, of Windsor, last week, occasioned an unusual excitement in that usually quiet town. It was a runaway match, both principals being minors. They drove to St. Croix, Hants Co., and were married by Rev. Henry. The relatives of the bride, however, followed, and the bride was taken from her young husband and carried back to Windsor, where she was held captive in her old home, while the groom was arrested on a charge of abduction. He, however, obtained his liberty the following evening, and backed up by a thousand of the citizens went to the house where his bride was imprisoned and entered by force. The police were on the spot, but unable to control the crowd. The bride's relatives had to give way, and the couple were reunited, let us trust to "live happy ever after."

The thunderstorm of Sunday evening last was terribly severe in P. E. I. Telephone and telegraph lines were damaged and many buildings struck. Several persons were also injured. In some sections the hail did severe damage to the crops.

Empire Lintment Mfg. Co., Bridgetown, N. S.

Dear Sirs:

I live in the community where your lintment is made, and never tried it until the winter of 1903. My wife was taken with neuralgia in her face and had ulcerated teeth. Her face swelled all out of shape and the pain was beyond endurance. She was advised to try your lintment by a representative of the Electrical Art Co., of Halifax. She got a sample and in an hour got relief, and in eight hours the swelling was all gone, and she had had no trouble since. I fell on the ice and hurt my side and back. Rheumatism set in and for three days I could not leave the house. Three applications stopped the pain and took out the soreness, and in one day I was all right. We think there is nothing like it for anything where a lintment is needed.

Yours truly,

G. H. GATES.
