The exquisite fancy was deliciously The exquisite fancy was deliciously rendered, and the orchestra touched new hints of delicate artistry. It is one of the perfect things in which Mr. Welsman has excelled himself. The addition of the harp to the orchestra was an effective one. The other dance was also capitally performed. The leading numbers were Cherubini's over-time to "Angereon" and Bligaries suite ture to "Anocreon," and Bizet's suit No. 1, L'Arlesienne. In the first of thes there was the same delicacy of tou-and refinement of interpretation which means so much in a large body of per-formers, and lifts the rendering from mere rhythmic noise into the deliberate and inspired achievements of musical expression. The hearty applause of the magnificent audience proved their ap-preciation of the splendid work of the orchestra. The picturesque scoring for horns, clarionets and flutes, and the long sweet subdued passages for strings, were beautifully taken. In the Bizet number, the minuetto was particularly graceful, and aroused applause, and the lovely adagletto rivaled the Dance of the Sylphs in attractive-
