Jesuits Found the Copper. That copper existed on Michipicoton has been known from the white man's earliest annais of Lake Superfor. The first published account is found in the Relacion de re qui s'est passe dans le pays des Hurons, Paris, 1666, in Chapter xl., entitled "De la Mission du Saint Esprit a la Pointe de Chagaoumigond dans le Lac Tracy, on Su-perieur," where is found the statement that "the first place where copper occurs in abundance, after going above the Sault de Sainte Marie, is on an island about 40 or 50 leagues therefrom, near the northern shore, apposite a place called by the Indians Missipleonatong." The spelling of Michipicoton (pronounced Mish-a-pa-cotton, with accent on the penultimate syllable) is Michipicoton (pronounced Mish-a-pa-cotton, with accent on the penultimate syllable) is barely recognizable, but there is no other island anywhere in that vicinity, and the legends of the Chippewas near the Sault still bear out the story written down by the Jesuit Fathers nearly 250 years ago. The savages believed that Michipicoton was an enchanted island and that it was not firmly anchored in the waters, but floated about and was liable to be met many leagues distant from where last seen. Its rocky shore, frequently and the specific of the chipping of many leagues distant from where last seen. Its rocky shore, frequently surrounded by themse fogs, assisted in giving this belief to the superstitious aborigines.

Indian Legend. Some hundreds of years ago, long before the advent of the first ma-ko-te-no-wa-e-nay, or Black Robe, as the Chippewas called the Jesuits, four Indians, lost in a fog, landed on the enchanted island and, building a fire, heated stones therein, throwing the stones into bark troughs in which were fish to cook their food. They found when the stones into bark troughs in which were fish, to cook their food. They found when removing the supposed stones that they were nuggets of pure copper and departed and no headache since five months ago and feel justified in saying that they are with their unexpected treasure. A little distance from shore a terrible voice was heard from the island, saying "Who has stolen the gradies and town of the condition of the con heard from the island, saying "Who has stolen the cradles and toys of my child-ren?" Almost paralyzed with fear, the Indians redoubled their labors at the paddles, ascribing the fearful voice to Missibizi, an evil genius, who frequented islands and was supposed to mostly favor Michiplecton as a residence. One of the Indians died before reaching the mainland and two others perished on putting foot asshore, the limit of the mainland and two others perished on putting foot asshore, the limit of the mainland and two others perished on putting foot asshore, the limit of the mainland and two others perished on putting foot asshore, the limit of the mainland and two others perished on putting foot asshore, the limit of the mainland and two others perished on putting foot asshore, the limit of the mainland and two others perished on putting foot asshore, the limit of the mainland and two others perished on putting foot asshore, the limit of the mainland and two others are supposed to mostly favor memoved all soreness and stiffness from my back and loins, cured me of headache and gave me healthy kidneys, removed all soreness and stiffness from my back and loins, cured me of headache and gave me healthy kidneys, removed all soreness and stiffness from my back and loins, cured me of headache and gave me of headache and space and stiffness from my back and loins, cured me of headache and gave me healthy kidneys, removed all soreness and stiffness from my back and loins, cured me of headache and gave me a good appetite, consequently I am highly pleased. ed and eight others had narrow escapes from death last night, by the careening and sinking of a barge at a bulkhead in the East River. Michael Quigley, 65 years of age, was the victim. He was watchman at the buikhead, and early in the evening noticed that the barge was in to help him unload the cargo. The men had no sooner entered than the barge gave a lurch and turned, slowly, until upside down. Five of the men worked their way out, leaving the three imprisoned. Firemen who were summoned succeeded in cutting holes in the bottom of the barge, and liberating Cunningham and Sulivan, but they were unable to locate Quigley, as the hulk again careened.
