"Different conditions obtain in America than in England. President Wilson pursues a true American policy. It seems to me that he is being compelled to use the soft pedal because many Americans at heart are more or less pacifists. There are indications that the discrepancies between the views of America and those of the entente powers originated in their different mental attitudes." M. Radoslavoff then admitted he had not seen the text of either speech, but said neither could alter or affect "our successes at Brest-Litovsk."
