Why is a hiccough like the popping of air from a cup?" was asked me in all seriousness. The annswer, of course, is that a hiccough is not like that. It is the association of ideas; of connecting a man in his cups with the other name of hiccoughs, such as "hiccups," that promoted that odd query.

It is also recalled that when you have hiccups or hiccups, the sudden expulsion or popping out, the belching forth of the stomach gases—gastritis, by the way, means inflammation of the "gastrum" or stomach, and has nothing to do with gases—sounds like "git up" or "git out" or "hic cup."

Be that as it may, a hiccough is a sudden, short, convulsive sucking or "breathing" in or swallowing of air attended with the characteristic sound you know. This sound is produced by
