WOMAN

NOCTURNE,

The love of the world it slides away.

God send us quietness!

The night is stiller than the day,

And tho the light be less,

White stars are gleaming from the deep

And purple vast of sky.
The road unto the stars is steep,
But dreams may fly.

The stillness of the night is kind,
And when the stars wax few
There steals upon the cheek a wind
Of sweetness and of dew.
Slumber advances and recedes
In delicate caprice,
That life may learn how much it and longs for peace.

The dulcimer of patience hath
A music all its own:
Outwearing joy and grief and wrath,
A tender monotone
To soothe us till o'er sense and sprite
The enshadowing hush is drawn,
And down the solemn tides of night
We drift toward dawn.

The Girl and Her Dress.

Incongruous fashions of the last two years have had something to do with the careless, or, perhaps, more strictly speaking, the thoughtless, girls street costumes. The wearing of openwork, filmy hosiery, designed originally for the house, and the adoption for out of door wear of transparent and openwork waists, most unsuitable for the street, could not fail to have a stunting effect upon their perceptions, and they ceased to have a consistent basis on which to gown themselves.

ent basis on which to gown themselves.

While such things were in vogue there was little or no criticism of using them, but the adoption of simple modes for out of doors and the abolition of openwork hosiery with street frocks call attention to the bad form of those who continue to use them. Conspicuous dressing in the street always suggests girls who have no other place than the shops or restaurants in which to display their costumes, and therefore appear in public, in the most gorgeous array. These are the girls whom others call "common," but their effect is little different from the exclusive if the latter so offend against good taste as to gown in the same way at the wrong time. No girl was ever criticized for dressing even severely for the street, provided that her frocks were of good material and well cut. Lingerie dresses and muslin effects are possible for out of doors only out of town or for carriage use in town. This is a fact that girls would do well to remember.

The little things about a girl's costume greatly indicate her breeding. The wearing of necklaces of imitation stone is not to be commended. A short one of gold or silver beads is suitable at certain times, and so is a long slender chain for a watch. But jewelry as a rule is not for the young, and when always in evidence denotes either ignorance or vulgarity. A girl should not wear more than one ring and that of a severe design. An engraved gold one, with the family crest, is good form for the little finger, and there may be conditions under which it is correct for her to wear a little finger ring of heavy gold or silver having a colored stone, such as tur-quoise, set deep in gypsy fashion. But the precious stones, diamonds, emeralds, rubles and the like are not for her until she is old enough to make her debut, and even then must be chosen seldom.

The wide range and elaborateness of hatpins give a girl opertunity to decorate her millinery in astonishing fashion, but she is wise who does not adopt these extremes. Fancy hatpins are not to be forbidden her, but she should remember that the a little of a thing may be very charming much of it is undesirable. Two, or at most three man with fancy countings. It is undesirable. Two, or at most three, pins, with fancy mountings, are quite permissible, for it may be pretended, should it not be the fact, that they are for service. But six pins will not hold on a hat any more securely than will three, and the greater number becomes grotesque.

How to Wash Gloves.

Among the most useful articles of girl's total are chamois gloves.

Besides adding a great deal to the appearance they are comfortable, and one does not have to think always about keeping them clean, because with very little effort they can be washed at a minuet's notice and look just as good as new, that is if one knows how.
