WORKED HARD FOR MONEY

That coal charter of the Yarmouth, N. S., steamer Usher, Captain Perry, is likely to go down into history as the longest on record for a single voyage and the greatest distance coal was ever transported for bunker purposes. The Usher, it will be remembered, was chartered to carry coal to the American battleship fleet at the antipodes and sailed with her cargo on June 11 from Newport News, Va., arriving at Auckland, August 21. She was a little too late for the fleet there, however, so she followed them up to Melbourne, where she arrived on September 2, but the ships were not ready to take her cargo, so she was to carry it along to Manila—New York Shipping Illustrated.

WANTED A HOUSE OF MANY COLORS

Amusing Case in the City Court This Morning.

In the session of the city court this morning, Hampton & Reynolds, painters, sued Charles Brager, a Jew, for $6, which the plaintiffs claimed was due them for services rendered in painting the defendant's house on Union street. J. M. Price was counsel for the plaintiffs and J. King Kelley for the defendant.

Even at the inception of the case, discord arose between the opposing lawyers and at one point Mr. Kelley accused Mr. Price of, as he expressed it, "trying to run a witness." Hampton and Reynolds both testified, denying the former's examination Mr. Kelley persisted in demanding that the witness should produce a contract in writing, despite the magistrate's ruling to the contrary, until his honor eventually silenced the barrister.

Hampton said he contracted with Brager to paint the latter's dwelling, but as he declined to honor the whims of Brager, his wife and daughter, who each desired the house to be painted in paint of different hues and wished him to do more than previously agreed, he was told to suspend operations after working twenty-four hours.

Brager gave evidence, and based his claim for refusing to recompense the plaintiffs on the assertion that the work was unsatisfactory.

HIS CASE DECIDED WHILE HE SLEPT

No Wonder Mr. Day Felt Sore When He Left the Police Court.

An illustration of the vagaries of fate occurred in the police court during the session of the city court. A man named Day had been sued for a sum of money and his anxiety to contest the action can be readily conceived when it is known that he was in the vicinity of the court room for an hour and a half previous to the commencement of the session, but unfortunately he fell asleep in one of the chairs in the court room and while he slumbered the case had been called and judgment rendered for the plaintiff by default, as the defendant had not complied with the order to defend. In due time Day awoke and asked the clerk to call the case on and was so chagrined at the reply that he strode angrily to the exit and slammed the door as he went out.
