The Washington Conference and The Destiny of China

By C. Montague Ede of Hong Kong.

The opportunity which the forth-coming conference at Washington offers for extending to China the help which she so much needs is emphasized in a letter which Mr. C. Montague Ede of the Union Insurance Society of Canton, Limited, Hong Kong, has addressed to The Toronto Globe. The idea of a united China, Mr. Ede insists, must precede the idea of a peaceful Pacific, because the latter is wholly contingent on the former.

"No one would wish," says Mr. Ede, "to run the risk of wrecking the conference by the introduction into the agenda of subjects which might cause some of the nations concerned to refuse co-operation, but at the same time it is certain that very little practical good will result from an academic debate upon the advantages and blessings of universal peace.

A United China.
"The specific problems of the Pacific and the Far East, highly controversial as they may be, must be frankly and fairly considered, and China—a huge country, torn asunder by the dissensions of its own people—is the breeding place of them all. A united China, at peace with herself, would ensure a long period of commercial and industrial development for which we are waiting. Let us suppose that the nations, profiting by the lessons which the European war has taught, and sincerely actuated by the high motives that are loudly proclaiming, do damage to agree upon some policy which will ally the distrust which each now has of the other, and present as a sovereign power in the council chamber, finding a group of nations united for a common end, could ask for assistance in putting her own heels in order with the fullest confidence that her rights would not be jeopardized by so doing.

Mr. Ede states that China's weakness arises from the fact that ambitious provincial commanders can defy the government with impunity. The great mass of the people, judging from their pathetic attitude toward political issues, would welcome any government which could save them from the rapacity of these adventurers. At present there is a president in Peking and one in Canton, and Tientsin will give allegiance neither to the one nor the other. The factions are continually at war; the treasurers of the North and South lie empty and commiserated at a standstill.

"If the Pacific Conference is to justify the hope that are placed in it," the writer continues, "the nations represented must come to an agreement under cover of which China will be given a real chance to reform her administration. An effective government could be elected if it were known that, when chosen, such government would have the fullest support of the conference powers.

Overcoming Rivalries.
"International rivalries and jealousies have prevented any common action on China's behalf in past years. If the Pacific Conference overcomes these, it will co-operate unflinchingly in helping China to work out its own salvation, the beneficial results will be quick to manifest themselves. If the conference leaves these millions of peaceful people and this country of immense resources at the mercy of military stragglers, who have momentarily the power of the purse, it is certain that resolutions toward armament will do little toward preserving peace in the Orient."

Mr. Ede remarks that the problem to be confronted at the conference, and overshadowed the whole situation.

"The peace of China," he says, "is an essential preliminary requisite to the peace of the Pacific, and the recognition of that fact must first be made before one can focus upon the wider concord as between the several nations interested."

Mr. Ede points out that in the closing days of the late Empire the forces of reform in China were struggling for an outlet; and remarks how the establishment of a republic under Dr. Sun Yat Sen was heralded by the world at large as the starting point of a new and wonderful China. Men saw visions of a united people peacefully working out their own social and economic advancement. Instead of this, however, factional differences, the loss of the original ideal, the inadequacy of those to whom power has been given and the failure of effect domestic reforms have brought China to the unhappy position of a country violently torn against itself and unable to prevent an effective voice in the international affairs with which she is most vitally concerned. Factional fights between Presidents and powerful Tientsins are making confusion worse confounded. The situation is leaving China open to the exploitation of other powers skeptical and jealous of each other's opportunities. To remove that skepticism and jealousy the cause must be removed, and there must be co-operation in an effort to assist China to regain her lost homogeneity.

World Needs United China.
"The world as a whole," the writer proceeds, "needs a united China; wants to trade with her, helping her to develop her resources, her labor, her minerals, her raw products. There is an immense demand for it all, for imports and exports—room for every nation to contribute and to receive. But there seems very little hope of gaining that unification—the unification that will unite half the problems of the Pacific—unless the powers that are party to the Washington Conference go to it prepared to assist. China needs help, financial and moral. She can get the former in abundance as soon as the consortium is satisfied that it would be spent in directions other than wasteful. She should be promised moral assistance without the actual asking for it. She needs money urgently for the disarmament of factional troops; she needs assistance to establish a democratic Federal system, with a central authority which could have the backing of outside powers—in short, her representative at the conference needs the open guarantee of support for the open guarantee to undertake the mission of constructing order out of existing chaos."

A Chance for China.
By the fate of Chancera there is presented an opportunity to accomplish two great ends, provided they are taken in their logical sequence, the writer states, the first being the reorganization and development of the most potential country in the world, the second being the provision of a common aim which will consolidate nations now seemingly the victims of conflicting interests.

"There has been no financial assistance presented to date since it became the hope of enlightened men," he says, "that it was in his power to establish a political union which would consolidate nations now seemingly the victims of conflicting interests. The hope of years past China has been torn apart by the forces of winter, and the hope of reform have not been realized.
