A MUCH-NAMED CITY.

Slovakian towns and cities evidently have an onerous burden to bear, judging from the most recently published maps. There is Pressburg, for instance. As every one knows, it was within the pre-war borders of Hungary, and a place noted for many things. In the first place, it was there that Maria Theresa took the oath of fealty in the presence of the nobles, standing upon a certain historic spot and pointing her royal sword to the four points of the compass in turn, in the second place, one had no sooner reached the city by rail than he had the assurance that travelling eastward was going to be a good deal more comfortable and expeditious than it had been on Cisleithan soil. Now the Hungarians with a perfect right to such nomenclature, called the city Pozsony. When, however, this famous Hungarian crowning place was handed over to Slovakia, it was at once given the Slovakian name of Bratislava. But now comes a fourth name, which has been officially placed on the maps—Wilson City! What would Maria Theresa "and all her heirs" say if they could see their much-loved Pressburg-Pozsony-Bratislava-Wilson City—Christian Science Monitor.
