And Take 20c. Bits for a

Wendell Phillips once said in a lecture: "When you read the news in a morning paper, you have no notion of what has really happened until you look up the paper's title."

That's just as true of advertising.

We have no intention of making irrelevant comments. We do not think it necessary to deary the methods of others to excel our own, but we understand enough about advertisements to know that the matter they contain is not received by readers with that confidence and interest which the announcement of any value whatever.

We print an advertisement together by its effect, and the results increase every succeeding week - as is the case - when put in ourselves.

Our readers are growing in faith.

After all we are but engaged in the good of purchasing your reliance - our price reductions being largely to our credit - we are not making any value placed upon what we do. The Greatest Thing in the World.
