ST. JOHN STAR.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MAY 26, 1902.

NO TIME TO LOSE.

Next week the cabinet will be in session at Ottawa. A St. John delegation will be given a hearing with reference to harbor improvements. What steps have been taken to arrive at an agreement as to what is wanted before next winter and what the general plan of harbor extension is to be? Is the delegation to be one from the city council, or a joint one, representing the council and board of trade? Is it to have a definite plan to propose, or will it ask Mr. Tarte what he thinks should be done? Is it to be strengthened by resolutions adopted by the citizens in meeting assembled, or is that not considered necessary?

Of one thing the people may rest assured. Unless they take themselves and their affairs seriously they need not expect the government to do so. The interviews published in the Star during the last few weeks proved the necessity of increased wharf and warehouse facilities. Railway men, steamship men and importers all tell the same story. The time is very short if anything is to be accomplished this year. The interests of the merchants and the working men are alike involved, and the future of the winter port demands prompt and united action.

CUBA.

It would surprise no one, unless it be some of the Cubans themselves, if within five years the island of Cuba should become a state of the American union. The people have been given a nominal independence, but unless they can secure the American market for their produce they will have a very severe struggle. They are not free to negotiate as they choose with other nations. While American statesmen are making a great show of disinterestedness, and the boast is made that they have given Cuba her opportunity, the truth is that, unless their commercial policy toward Cuba is changed, they will without any other effort on their own part make annexation a potent factor in Cuban politics. Independence is the gliding of the annexation bill. In the end, the best thing that could happen to Cuba, considering her past history and the character of her people, might be a union with the United States. If a forcible union were attempted now, after all the fine professions made at the outset, it would be resisted; but a few years of disciplinary hardship and of quiet and persistent influence would accomplish the end without other pressure. Cuba, unlike Canada, cannot look elsewhere. It is practically the United States or nothing. Therefore the eagle has merely to plume his feathers and wait.

Both parties predict victory in the pending elections in Ontario. The opinion, privately expressed, of leading men in the province, on both sides, is that the fight will be a hard one. Of course the whole strength of the federal government and patronage will be thrown on the side of the liberals, as the defeat of Ross would preface sore trouble for Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his colleagues when next they appeal to the people. The liberal conservatives of Ontario have a fine opportunity to show the way to some other provinces, and lead the procession in the direction of better government for Canada.

In an article on the late Rev. Dr. Grant the Maritime Merchant suggests that Nova Scotia, which gave him to Canada, should erect a monument to his memory. The Merchant recalls the fact that no fitting monument has yet been erected in honor of Howe, Johnston or Sir William Dawson, but expresses the hope that appreciation of her distinguished sons will yet be manifested by the province. New Brunswick as well as Nova Scotia, has been too indifferent in this respect. Memorials of notable men and events are far too few among us.

It is stated that the lumber shipments from Halifax thus far this season have far exceeded those of former years, owing to a special effort to market the lumber early, and that the shipments later will be smaller, as the total cut is below the average and some logs are hung up in the streams.

Forest fires have been doing a good deal of damage during the last two weeks, both in this province and Nova Scotia. In the majority of cases these fires are the result of carelessness. There is probably no means of avoiding the trouble, except by the exercise of common sense on the part of all the people. Great care should be taken in setting brush fires.

The London Daily Mail in its issue this morning says the announcement of peace may be expected at any moment and that it will be found the government has remained inflexible on all vital points at issue. Premier Seddon, of New Zealand, who is now in Pretoria, has cabled home that he does not think another New Zealand contingent will be needed.

REVISED PRESBYTERIAN CREED.

(New York Herald, 23rd.)

IMPORTANT CHANGES.

"No man is condemned except on the ground of his sin." "We believe that all dying in infancy are included in the election of grace, and are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit, who works when and where and how He pleases."

"Work done by unregenerate men, although for the matter of them they may be things which God commands, and in themselves praiseworthy and useful . . . they come short of what God requires, and do not make any man meet to receive the grace of God."

"The Lord Jesus Christ is the only head of the church, and the claim of any man to be the vicar of Christ and the head of the church is unscriptural, without warrant in fact, and is a usurpation dishonoring to the Lord Jesus Christ."

THIS CLAUSE IS STRICKEN OUT.

"Yet it is a sin to refuse an oath touching anything that is good and just, being imposed by lawful authority."

With only two dissenting votes the Presbyterian General Assembly, in the Fifth avenue church, yesterday, adopted the report of its committee on the proposed revision of certain portions of the Westminster Confession. The report was adopted in its entirety and without a single amendment or alteration.

This action was accompanied with cheers that fairly shook the church. All the commissioners realized that they were making history as they cast the decisive vote which will eliminate from the Presbyterian creed the reference to the Pope and the statement that it is sinful to refuse an oath imposed by lawful authority. It also embodies denials of the doctrine of infant damnation and the statement that works done by unregenerate men are in themselves sinful.

NORTH END FIRE.

House on Metcalf Street Badly Damaged by Flames Saturday Afternoon.

The top flat of the house owned by Capt. John Macrae on Metcalf street was badly damaged Saturday afternoon by a fire of mysterious origin.

The flat is occupied by the family of Chas. Ingalls, who left for up river on the Hampstead early Saturday afternoon, leaving their rooms locked. The fire was put out with little difficulty, but not before the flat had been practically gutted and most of the furniture damaged. The flats below occupied by Mrs. Hamm and on the ground floor by Capt. Macrae escaped without injury. It was impossible to send word to Mrs. Ingalls yesterday, and the first intimation he will have when he arrives on the return trip of the Hampstead this morning. The building was insured for $800, $400 in the companies represented by Weldon & McLean and $400 with Chubb & Co.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE.

WASHINGTON, May 25.—Carroll Norton, in a lecture delivered before a large audience at the Columbia church today, announced that two million cases of disease have been healed in Christian Science during the 25 years of its history, and that in that time about 700 Christian Science churches have been established and are now flourishing. He said that Christian Science was not faith cure, mind cure or mesmerism, but that it holds the link only through a scientific understanding of man's relation to God. In his contention for right thinking and proper models of thought, he declared that it should be made criminal to publish the details of crime or of contagious diseases, because of the effect of such publications on health and morals.

BROKE HIS ARM.

John Sullivan of the I. C. R. employ fractured his arm and received other painful injuries while carrying one of his work as switch tender in the yard last evening. One of the switch lamps had gone out, and while climbing up to replace it he missed his footing and fell on the track beneath, breaking his arm above and below the elbow and sustaining a bad cut and some painful bruises about his head. He was taken to his home on Smythe street, where his injuries received medical attendance.

A NOBLE BEQUEST.

HALIFAX, N. S., May 25.—The will of the late ex-Mayor Hamilton provides that his estate, estimated at $60,000, shall go to his mother during her life, and at her death it provides that the bulk of it shall go to form an endowment for the Halifax Dispensary, a charity of great importance to the poor of the city. His funeral today was one of the largest ever seen in Halifax.

NEGRO LYNCHED.

PARIS, Mo., May 25.—Abe Withers, a negro, the murderer of William Grow, who was killed last month, was taken from the Paris jail early this morning, marched to the bridge on the north edge of the town and hanged by a mob of more than a hundred men. Bygonesites and all athletes depend on BENTLEY'S Liniment to keep their joints limber and muscles in trim.

AFTER TROUT.

Being the Truthful Story of a Fishing Trip.

Wherein Three St. John Men Went After Sport and Got It.

It is told that some Americans once went to New River on the line of the N. B. Southern railway (the Shore Line) beyond Lepreau, to fish for trout. Being questioned on their return, they spoke with the tongues—not of angels—but of plain men. When separated from certain picturesque and profane expositions, their words conveyed the information that they had caught thirty-seven dozen trout, all of which could be comfortably packed in a pill box.

This is probably the most remarkable fish story ever told. These citizens of the republic were certainly amateur sportsmen; for no true American angler would so minimize the results of his skill. It would boast of at least one trout large enough to tow his boat, even if he did admit that it finally got away. At the New River hotel last Wednesday evening a trapper of that region told how nine years ago a bear had left one of its fore paws in his trap; last fall he shot the rest of the animal, which had walked on three legs for nine years waiting for a convenient chance to the game. This trapper is a sportsman. He can tell a story.

On Thursday morning last a newspaper man went to New River to join John Longon and Robert Campbell for two days' fishing. The two had gone down the day before, and spent a few hours on New River, with fair success; and on Thursday the party fished the Pocologan stream. Robert Giles, of the hotel, and his son Charles hitched a horse to an ordinary farm wagon and the five set off with a generous lunch, provided by Mrs. Giles. For three miles they drove along a country road, passing only one house on the way, and seeing nothing but trees and barrens and distant hills. The catkins were out on the willows and the blossoms on the May-cherry; and here and there an adventurous birch or poplar pushed its leaves tentatively out into the May atmosphere, which was so chilly that the newspaper man wore a light overcoat all day without discomfort.

After a ride of three miles a point was reached, at the second and last house on the road, where the latter crossed the Pocologan. A small flat-bottomed boat lay on the shore, and was dragged up and put on the wagon. Then for two miles farther the party went over a rough road, through the wilderness till they struck the stream again. Here the boat was launched. Mr. Giles, sr., went back with the team, leaving it at the house where the boat had been taken up, and the other four started on their voyage down stream, fishing as they went.

The Pocologan is a remarkable stream. Its current is for the most part swift. In some places there are shallows. In others pools of great depth sink sheer down from rocky ledges. For long stretches the bottom is covered with a reedy growth, or some other species of plant life, suggesting that at low water in mid-summer the surface would resemble a meadow. The shores are covered with a vigorous growth of bushes, which make bank fishing very difficult, although, apart from treacherous pot-holes, it is easy to wade the shallows. These shallows were a source of much tribulation to the party in the boat. The craft would run aground and then one, and often two, of the party had to get out and drag it over into deep water. A number of short oars were utilized to guide the boat the current, and of course the boatmen were obliged to wade. The stream is narrow, and at one place a tree lies clear across it, just on the surface. The party drifted down to this windfall, and after taking half a dozen trout from the ripples on the lower side had to get out and lift the boat over—a no easy task, for only two could work, with a precarious footing on top of the old tree.

The boat had been launched about twelve o'clock and at six was still a considerable distance from the place where the party intended to land. The stream was growing more shallow, the boat had shipped water many times and had to be hauled up and emptied. The contents of the lunch basket had got soaked in one place, and the members of the party had wet feet and a consuming hunger, and as the ground was open along the banks at this point the three fishermen decided to go ashore, walk to the bridge at Donnelly's, where the team awaited them, and let Charlie navigate the lightened craft.

This was done, and a little before seven o'clock they were in the wagon again, tired but cheerful, with five dozen trout in the basket. The newspaper man not being an experienced angler, lost a good many fish, including all of the large ones that got away. The other fellows did some boasting, until one of them played a large fish and landed him to find that he was only a sucker.

The experience of the party demonstrated that the Pocologan stream is full of trout. One man, in a light craft, drifting along quietly and anchoring often, and doing now and then a little wading, would get a great haul. Or if he took a short stretch of the stream and fished it patiently without a boat, he would get plenty of fish, with less exertion. They are not large trout, and the man who wants one and two and three pound fish must go elsewhere. Thursday's party did not get a fish that weighed over half a pound, and most of them were never more than a quarter of a pound. They were just ordinary, lively brook trout, a delicious fish. They would not rise to the hook, and the party, after a trial, used bait only.

The ride home from the Pocologan was more exciting than that to the stream. In the morning the old man had moved with great deliberation, so much so that the party had ample time to inspect the country and return the interested scrutiny of a large pecuniation on a leafless tree by the roadside. But on the return it was a case of clinging to the seat or fall by the wayside. Sixteen years ago this mare had hauled a delivery team on the streets of St. John. Perhaps the voices of the men from St. John awoke some slumbering memory of bygone days, when populous street corners were turned at break-neck speed, under the whip of a reckless youngster; at all events the animal picked up her heels and made such time that a rabbit running ahead of the team foresaw defeat and took to the woods to avoid it.

A hearty supper, a hot fire to dry them, and a good bed to sleep in awaited the fishermen. They went early to rest, and were only astir in the morning. But heavy rain fell during part of the forenoon, and it was 10.30 before they set out on foot to whip the Little New River. Between the showers they had tried fly and bait on New River, which is close to the house, but got nothing, although fish were taken from that stream on each of the preceding days. Charlie declared that the heavy thunder explained the fact that not a fish would rise that morning.

The weather was clear and warm when they reached Little New River, only a short walk from the house. The purpose of the party was to follow the windings of the stream until it came back to the highway, at McKay's, a mile from the New River house. Three of them did, but the scribe, who was not as eager for exercise as on the preceding day, went up the road to McKay's and did all his fishing on a quarter of a mile of the stream where it ran through a meadow. He was wise in his day and generation, for he got a good string, taking no less than fifteen fish out of one place, where the stream ran over shallows and formed a deep current under an alder fringed bank. At a point where the stream made a right angle at the foot of a steep hill, and plunged into a thicket, the vanguard of the flies that were lying in wait beyond came into action and the scribe beat a hasty retreat.

At McKay's he instructed two young ladies in the art of cutting potatoes for seed, drank soddy glasses of milk, assisted the young ladies to catch one trout and lose another from a pool under the highway bridge, and was beginning to entertain serious thoughts of buying a farm close to Little New River when his watch informed him that he had forty minutes to walk a mile, eat his dinner and catch the train. Meantime Charlie had emerged from the wilderness with fewer fish for his long jaunt than the scribe had got, with the charms of beauty and civilization added. The other two fishermen were not in sight, but just as the train pulled out of New River they could be seen coming along the road, each with a large string. So far as this party was concerned, Little New River gave them better sport, more fish and less hardship than did the Pocologan. But each stream takes its turn in giving good sport. Last year two of this party got many more fish out of the Pocologan than the three got out of it this year. At the New River house there is a Kodak picture of a great haul of trout taken out of New River on May 24th, 1901, by Mr. Richardson, of St. John. One of the advantages of going to New River is that there are three streams within easy reach, and one or the other, if not all, will yield good sport. There is also a chance to reach, but full of trout. At the New River house Mr. and Mrs. Giles provide guests with excellent food and good beds, and make them feel thoroughly at home. Owing to the cold weather this spring the fishing is not yet at its best.

Members, Longon and Campbell returned to the city on Saturday night with 140 fish. On Saturday sixteen fishermen arrived at New River from St. John. When the newspaper man boarded the train for St. John on Friday afternoon he found George Barnhill and a fishing rod on route home from farther down the line. Mr. Barnhill knows the lakes and streams from St. John to the border, and can talk about them. If companionship and conversation were permissible on "la longue traversée," the writer of these lines would like to journey to the happy hunting grounds with Geo. Barnhill. A large party of Americans came to Lepreau on Saturday and went up to a lake a few miles from that point. For the next month or more there will be many fishermen on the waters between the St. John and the St. Croix.

ANOTHER QUEBEC MIRACLE. The Eyes in a Picture of the Holy Face Are Said to Move.

(Quebec Chronicle, May 22.)

Great excitement was caused in St. Roch's last evening over the rumor that something extraordinary had happened in a house on Richardson street. A man named Adelard Lavoie has had in his possession for the last six years a picture of the Holy Face hanging on one of the walls of his residence on that street, and a couple of nights past the occupants of the house noticed that the eyes in the picture frequently opened and closed. This was particularly noticeable last evening and as the rumor had widely circulated, hundreds of citizens visited the place, in fact, the crowd was so large that the police had to interfere to keep the crowd moving about. At one time last evening there were about six hundred visitors to the house in question, and those who succeeded in entering the room, saw the eyes moving. During part of the evening those present recited prayers.

(Correspondent Montreal Herald, May 23rd.)

The whole of St. Roch and St. Sauveur suburbs is agog because of the discovery of an alleged miraculous picture. A man named Adelard Lavoie, who lives at No. 281 Richardson street, with his wife, two children and his mother-in-law, is the possessor, and his little home has been invaded lately by the curious and the faithful. Last night there were hundreds crowded in the street, and the house was completely filled. Indeed, the service of the police had to be called in to keep the crowds in order.

The picture in question is a representation of the face of our Lord, a facsimile of the handkerchief of St. Veronica preserved in the Vatican. It is a chromo about twelve inches by fifteen, and is enclosed in a heavy gold frame. The picture has been in Mr. Lavoie's house for seven years, and nothing peculiar was noted until Monday night last. While earnestly looking at the picture, Mme. Lavoie noticed that the eyes appeared to move. Naturally she was afraid, and called the rest of the family. They all noticed the phenomenon, and immediately they spent some hours in their devotions. The neighbors were called in, and were asked if they saw anything peculiar in the picture. All of them noticed the moving eyes, and there was a vast sensation in the neighborhood, which has not yet subsided.

The Herald correspondent personally visited the house this morning and inspected the picture. There was also present A. Gagnon, Quebec representative of the Canada Cycle and Motor Company. During the half hour that your correspondent was present he failed to see the cause of the excitement. However, a correspondent of one of the Montreal papers visited the house last evening and saw the phenomenon. The affair was reported to Cure Roy, of the parish of Jacques Cartier, and he will visit and carefully inspect the picture. The street this morning was crowded with hundreds of little girls from the St. Roch's convent, and every time the door was opened they were restrained with the utmost difficulty from rushing into the house.
