LONDON, April 24—Viscount Mountmorres, an Irish peer, has had an amusing adventure with a party of Moorish brigands, whom he outwitted very much in the same way as Raisuli outwitted Kaid Maclean.

Lord Mountmorres was cruising off Cape Juby in a sail schooner when a party of Bedouins came off in a dingy and told him that the "Baleine," a French steamer, had gone ashore twelve miles to the South, and that the captain and crew, to the number of nineteen, had been captured by wandering brigands. The local Kaid was well-disposed toward the prisoners, but he was helpless against the brigands, who threatened to kill the Frenchmen on the spot.

The Kaid sent a message to Mountmorres begging for help, but warning him that if he attempted to rescue the Frenchmen by force they would all be killed. Mountmorres thereupon set sail for Las Palmas, where he reported the affair to the British and French consuls, and the French cansul commissioned him to return to Cape Juby and negotiate for the release of the prisoners.

When Mountmorres got back, he negotiate for the release of the prisoners.

When Mountmorres got back, he found that the brigands were divided into parties. One party claimed to own ten Frenchmen, the other party claimed nine. Those with the ten demanded a ransom of 20,000 Moorish dollars per head; the other held that their nine captives were worth 30,000 Moorish dollars each. The total ransom demanded was about $300,000.

A debate ensued and Mountmorres offered $1,000 for all nineteen prisoners, and added that it must be accepted before sundown, and that he would wait on board his ship for the answer. Next morning a boat put off from the shore carrying an emissary from the brigands rowed by three servants of the Kaid. Mountmorres took them on board, asked them politely after health, and told them they were his prisoners.

Leaving the brigand on board, he went ashore and met the brigands. "I am going to hang your man at once," was his salutation. The horrified brigands replied immediately that they would accept the $1,000.

"It is too late now," said Mountmorres, "the negotiations are off. But I will agree to exchange my one brigand for nineteen Frenchmen." an unfair bargain, but Mountmorres stood firm, and the nineteen shipwrecked men were duly delivered on board his schooner, unharmed and board his schooner, unharmed and much entertained by the manner of

"SPRING FEVER"

The need of a spring medicine seems to be universal. This is due to the fact that during the winter the blood becomes impure on account of the hearty food eaten.
This causes that tired, weary, all-gone, don't-care-to-work feeling which is so prevalent at this time of year.
