WATCHMAKING.

J. SMITH, WATCHMAKER, (late of London,) is thankful for past favors, informs the public of Saint John and vicinity that he still attends to the business at his Old Stand, No. 52 KING STREET, next adjoining Mr. Christie's Leather Store; he was seven years in the employment of the late Mr. Thomas Earnshaw, of High Holborn, London, and has had many years practice in some of the leading firms in many towns in England, and has within the last four years in Saint John repaired more than three hundred Watches that had been spoiled by unskillful workmen and laid aside by their owners as valueless, until taken to above named, who has put them in good order, and they are now going and giving every satisfaction to their owners, the truth of which statement can be substantiated. He is the only man that manufactures Watches in Saint John, and keeps no boys to practice on Watches handed in for repairs. N. B.—The fact of being a dealer in Jewellery and Watches does not constitute the proprietor of the establishment a Watchmaker.

[From the London Times, March 11.] THE ROYAL MARRIAGE.

Yesterday, the marriage ceremony in which the English nation feels so deep an interest was performed with fitting pomp and solemnity at Windsor. The fair Princess, who landed on Saturday morning a stranger to the people, their habits and modes of thought, is now a member of our State, the partner for life of the heir apparent to the throne, and, if the favorable omens under which that union was contracted be verified in the event, is destined to play a not unimportant part in the history of the Royal House of England. For the last quarter of a century we have been so favored, as compared with other nations, in the rule under which it is our privilege to dwell, that we have well-nigh forgotten that there can be such things as injudicious or even indifferent rulers. Lecturers and historians, indeed, dwell on the events of the civil war, and of the period before the Reform bill, as conveying lessons both to kings and subjects; but in practice we have fallen into the habit of thinking that what is new will always be. Yet it needs but a slight retrospective glance to discern the magnitude of the influences for good or evil which can be exercised by a single well or ill-assorted union. The example of a sovereign nearly related to the present monarch was as pernicious in its effects as the mild and pure influences of her sway have proved beneficial. Hence the instinctive interest which the nation felt in the nuptials just solemnised, and its readiness to share in what was willingly accepted as a marriage of affection. From the moment of its first promulgation the proposed alliance with Denmark was decidedly popular, and the feeling in its favor was gaining day by day, till the culminating point was reached at sight of the fair face which has left home and kindred to become the adopted daughter of England. Among the Orders of Danish knighthood there is one the ranks of which are open equally to male and female knights, and its name seems singularly applicable to the event which has taken place. Let us hope that in the happiness the Prince and Princess of Wales may mutually derive, the advantages they will each obtain from the counsels and sympathy of the other, above all, in the results of their marriage, as these will affect the nation at large, the English people may feel justified in applying to their union the title of the third Danish Order—"La Parfaite Alliance."

WINDSOR AND THE PROCESSION.

From an early hour the town of Windsor was astir. At 11½ o'clock precisely, seven of the Royal carriages, with an escort of Horse Guards, left the Castle and proceeded in the direction of St. George's Chapel. At 11 o'clock expectation was further gratified by the issuing forth of another cortege, composed of members of the Royal family and the Queen's Household.

THE BRIDE.

It is needless to add that at the sight of the Princess Alexandra, enthusiasm, which had been intense, was redoubled. Her Royal Highness had not the same flush of excitement on her features which was visible on the occasion of her public entry, but she looked, if possible, more charming and winsome than on that occasion, though exhibiting faint traces of agitation in her demeanor.

ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL.

Simple, lofty and cold, it is difficult to light up the nave of St. George's. But the difficulty was overcome yesterday by hues and colors so rich and bright from the floor half-way up the fluted pillars, that the effect was like that produced by a piece of gorgeous tapestry, or by a grand oriental carpeting hung on the walls. The nave served as the channel and embankment of the stream which swept from the outer hall to the Chapel laden with all the pagantry of the great spectacle, and, returning hence, rolled back its tide once more, bearing the Prince and his bride on the swelling crest of all its pomp.

THE ALTAR.

The altar was arrayed with its gold communion plate in massive rows, the seats in the Knights' stalls and the spaces in front were covered with purple velvet, each seat bearing on a large card the name and rank of its occupant. Beyond these changes there was not much to note in the choir differing from the usual quiet, dim, religious aspects, as becomes the historic chapel of the eldest kingly seat of the oldest dynasty in Europe.

THE KNIGHTS OF THE GARTER.

It is a quarter to 12, and there is a short hush of expectation—one of those periods of unaccountable silence which always fall at intervals even upon the most crowded and animated assemblies. The Usher of the Black Rod, Sir Augustus Clifford, enters, and then there is another pause, that is quickly broken by a loud hum of admiration in the nave, which the more stately and select gathering in the choir only notice by increased rigidity of uprightness till the cause of the murmur is made known by the appearance at the entrance of the Knights of the Garter, all robed and jewelled in their almost regal costume, and headed by the Premier himself. They make a noble and gallant show as they sweep up the choir like a procession of monarchs, with their long velvet mantles of imperial blue, looped up at the shoulders with white ribbon, trailing after them. Lord Palmerston proceeds at once to his stall on the left, where he is joined by Lady Palmerston; and the others, after waiting for a single second in a stately group, pass also to their seats. The Premier was, of course, the most observed of all, as he stepped up lightly into his seat, and looked around him with a brisk joviality, as if about to quell a troublesome member, or evade, by a most voluminous reply, an awkward question. The Duke of Newcastle, Earl Granville, Earl Clarendon and Earl Russell are the most noticed of the rest, and the latter, when once he sits in his wide, high, ample stall, is almost lost to view.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.

After all the knights are seated, the Lord Chancellor, in his state robes, and carrying the Great Seal, passes slow and stately up the choir—alone, but a perfect pageant in himself—to his seat at the head of all. It is now 11½ o'clock, and the Archbishop of Canterbury enters, followed by the Bishop of London, attending as Dean of the Chapel Royal; the Bishop of Oxford, as Chancellor of the Order of the Garter; the Bishop of Winchester, as its Prelate; the Bishop of Chester, as Clerk of the Closet; and the Dean of Windsor, as Registrar of the Order of the Garter, with the Canons and Minor Canons of the Chapel. The suffragan Bishops stand aside as the dais is reached, and make way for the Primate, who passes at once to the north of the altar, and the Dean, robed in scarlet, with the Canons, take their places to the south. For a minute the prelates kneel in prayer, then rise and stand in line inside the rails.

THE CORPS DIPLOMATIQUE.

Then there is a slight rustle of silks and clinking of jewelled Orders as nearly the whole Corps Diplomatique come in and take their places underneath the royal pew—showing literally like a cluster of
