

Yearbook Message - 1968

I extend to every student congratulations and best wishes at the end of another academic year. It has been one in which there have been very active discussions about the role of students in University affairs, the form of the curriculum and the organization of the University. In later years, some of you will be associated with this or some other universities either as members of the faculty, on the Board of Governors or even as administrators and you will look back to 1968 to assess what has taken place since you were at university. It is certain that everyone will be able to look back in 1978 and see that great changes had occurred, just as I can recall the extensive changes that have taken place in the last decade.

Most of those graduating this year will take their place in the communities, become taxpayers, and thus will have a direct interest in the extent of support to the University and the quality of education provided by it. As alumni of this university, you can play an important role in interpreting the university to people who have not had the advantages made available to you.
