

ball. Belle was looking charming; dressed in white brocade, with the costly necklace of pearls that Stanmore had given her before her marriage as her only ornament.

"What does this all mean, Belle?" he said. "Why do you think I'm married, or believe that such a thing could be, though I know you were?"

"Not until they told me you were married to Miss Vane," answered Belle, in a broken and trembling voice.

"We have been shamefully deceived," continued Gilbert sternly, as Belle's voice failed her.

"I wish," said the small boy lately, "that I lived in Neddie's house."

"Belle looked very pretty to-night," Lady Stanmore said, though half-grudgingly, to her brother-in-law.

"How many may I have, Lady Stanmore?" he said. "You will be so charmingly in cannot bar the idea of walking with anyone else."

"You must, on the contrary, dance with everyone else," she answered. "I will dance with you once again, that is all."

"Ah, that is too cruel. Let me at least have the first waltz after supper in addition to the two before?"

"Do not let us waste our time now," continued young Marchmont. "Shall we commence?"

"Belle slightly turned her head to comply with his request, and as she did so she gave a sudden start, and the flush on her cheeks faded.

"Not yet," she said, faintly, and young Marchmont looked at her anxiously.

"You are surprised to see me?" he said, addressing Belle, without holding out his hand.

"Belle made a great effort, and a low faltering 'Yes' escaped her quivering lips.

Play-Room for Children. "I wish," said the small boy lately, "that I lived in Neddie's house."

All model mothers and teachers descend on the virtues of children picking up litter made by themselves in their play, and it may be the ranklest heresy to dispute such an august body, but at least one letter to the small boy's plaint sympathized with him.

"For really small folks, a big low basket, both a handle and one cover, is an excellent receptacle for blocks, soldiers and all the odds and ends of toys dear to the youngsters' hearts.

"Well, I'm sure you were as eager as I was for the letters this morning," he laughed. "It would serve you right if there were none, keeping me waiting all this time for my breakfast, too."

"Don't go yet, Harry," she said; "he's just coming now," and even as she spoke the boat drew up at the yacht's side.

"Now, sweetheart," he said, "you'll give me a cup of tea, won't you? Here are two letters for you, do come and sit down!"

Mr. and Mrs. John Smith did not live happily together. He was a pretty fair average husband, and got along pretty well with her, when she let him.

Letters come day by day telling us that this cure has been cured of dyspepsia, that person of Bad Blood, and another of Headache, still another of Biliousness, and yet others of various complaints of the Stomach, Liver, Bowels or Blood, all through the intelligent use of Burdock Blood Bitters.

It is the voice of the people recognizing the fact that Burdock Blood Bitters cures all diseases of the Stomach, Liver, Bowels and Blood.

Mr. T. G. Ludlow, 334 Colborne Street, Brantford, Ont., says: "During seven years prior to 1886, my wife was sick all the time with violent headaches. Her head was so hot that it felt like burning up. She was weak, run down, and so feeble that she could hardly do anything, and so nervous that the least noise startled her. Night or day she could not rest and life was a misery to her. I tried all kinds of medicines and treatment for her but she steadily grew worse until I bought six bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters from C. Stork & Son, of Brantford, Ont., for which I paid $5.00, and it was the best investment I ever made in my life. Mrs. Ludlow took four out of the six bottles—there was no need of the other two, for those four bottles made her a strong, healthy woman, and removed every ailment from which she had suffered, and she enjoyed the most vigorous health. That five dollars saved me lots of money in medicine and attendance thereafter, and better than that it made home a comfort to me."

A CRUMPLED ROSE LEAF

The well-known bay at Algiers was most delightfully still. The sun glinted down on the white hills of a yacht lying a mile or two out, making the brasswork glitter and the pretty little breakfast table, set under the awning, look most cool and inviting. It was charmingly arranged a deuce and everything, from the delicate eggshell china to the little rat talk spoons, of the daintiest description. Every thing round looked as though a spell lay over it, and the ship were about to sail into an enchanted city—the brilliant blue of the Mediterranean, and the cloudless southern sky, with the white roofs and orange groves of Algiers in the distance.

"Fancy Harry," she was laughing, just a month to-day since we were married! What a charming remembrance! And what a lovely idea of yours to have all those flowers brought over to decorate the ship with for to-night. The sun beat down on the little white hands holding the bands, and made the brilliant rings upon them glitter again.

"Well, I'm sure you were as eager as I was for the letters this morning," he laughed. "It would serve you right if there were none, keeping me waiting all this time for my breakfast, too."

"Don't go yet, Harry," she said; "he's just coming now," and even as she spoke the boat drew up at the yacht's side.

It was a very pale little Molly who was sitting a week later at the same breakfast table, opening a little package her husband had just given her. It was a bracelet in the form of a tiny gold snake, with gleaming eyes of emeralds; and on its quivering tongue lay a crumpled roseleaf of rosy enamel.

"How beautiful! Harry," she said. "Thank you a thousand times and are they actually clever enough to make such a thing in that baz ar in Algiers?"

"These eastern people are consummate masters in the art of jewelry, dearest," he answered; "and now, when my little wife wears this, may it always be the only crumpled roseleaf in her hair—Madame."
