Observatory opens

The University of Alberta campus observatory will again open its doors to the public with regularly scheduled shows each Friday.

Beginning September 16, two one-hour shows will be held each Friday evening at 9 and 10 p.m.

In the event of poor weather conditions, slide and film shows or an informal lecture will be given.

Advanced bookings must be made through the University's public relations office.

The observatory is located on the roof of the physics building on the university campus within a protective enclosure with a sliding roof.

But the minister did recognize the need for a constitutional amendment were Quebec to remain in confederation.

When asked what would happen if a referendum failed in Quebec, he said that a more powerful central government would be needed for all of Canada and that a new constitution is needed for modern times. His initial response to this question was that he felt that the separatist case would indeed win a referendum in the separation of Quebec from Canada.
