Algoma and an Author

It is an author who is said to be the product of any particular district—and why not, just as much as a variety of flowers, or fruit, or grain?—Alan Sullivan, the distinguished Canadian poet and novelist, should be most properly identified with Algoma, that curiously shaped county of Ontario, which stretches from the cities and settlements of the shores of Lake Huron and Lake Superior, up through the 3,000 square miles of the Missisquoi Forest Reserve, to the great fur-trading territories three hundred and sixty miles north, where it is bounded by the Albany River, the chief tributary of James Bay. The remarkable character of this county, which contained some thirty years ago at the instance of C. P. R. agents by hardy pioneers from the older counties of Rhode Island and Bruce, but the city of Sault Ste. Marie has its roots in the remote past, as it was a trading post for the voyageurs, who travelled for the fur-traders of Montreal into the far West. Alan Sullivan, whose father was living in the Algoma District, was at one time engaged in the work of construction and building the Algoma branch of the C. P. R. between Sudbury and the Sault Ste. Marie, and uses the local color in several of his short stories. "It was fascinating," he says, "in those days to watch the psychological effect of the arrival of the track, or even of the survey party on the settlers. They brightened up and looked at their farms with new eyes. They were in touch with the world that heretofore had seemed so distant." The bush fire, the miners,

A Necessity in the House.
Most of the common ills of life arise from a torpid, sluggish condition of the liver, kidneys or bowels, and because they act on each of these organs in a direct and specific way, Dr. Cass's Kidney-Liver Pills overcome various and painful diseases over which ordinary medicines have no control.
A lump of salt placed in the sink will keep the drain clear; placed in the frying pan it will prevent grease from spluttering.
They both plighted their troth and were talking things over. They both decided to be quiet on the other married couples—forgetting and long suffering and patient with each other.
"Not," said the man, "I shall not be like other husbands who sit across and bang things about if the coffee was cold!"
"If you ever did," said the girl very sweetly, "I should make it hot for you!"
And the young man wondered what she meant.

The Promise.
A VIVID WAR STORY FROM THE FRONT, WHICH CONTAINS ALL THE ELEMENTS OF A TALEND WAR DRAMA.
(The New York Tribune prints the beautiful story by Frederic Bonnet, translated recently in Le Journal of Paris. The translation is by Wm. L. McPherson. M. Bonnet has, in a big degree, the art of illuminating little incidents and situations—of filling them with a meaning larger than themselves. The emotional recollections which war inspires on a grand scale are in 'The Promise' in miniature. The suggestion of death and the struggle of the soldier whose comrades dominate every war tragedy.)

The afternoon was wearing on. The threat of a coming storm had deepened the shade of the forest as the soldier who was following the wooded path, debouched into a large clearing. He recognized this at once, remembering the description of it which had been given to him, and he also recognized by its ivy-covered roof the house which he was seeking. In haste he crossed the clearing and as the first drops of rain imprinted themselves in the dust of the path he knocked at the door which was promptly opened.
"M. Maray?" he asked.
"Papa is not here; he has gone to town," answered a fresh voice. "But if you wish to see his assistant, he lives only a little distance away."
A young girl had appeared on the doorstep, followed by a huge dog, who growled and whom she told to keep quiet. She seemed to be about 16 or 17 years old. In her gray cloth dress she looked tall and well developed. Her clear face showed lines that were still childish; but her eyes were serious, calm, serene. With her hand she brushed from her brow some unruly tresses of chestnut hair.
"I would to speak first to M. Maray," the soldier stammered.
On seeing her he had recoiled involuntarily, and she now gazed at him with astonishment, for he was obviously and painfully embarrassed, and that didn't go well with his great height, his vigorous features and his frank and open expression.
"I am not a favor before I go. Will anything happens to me, to send you anything that I shall leave here? That will not displease you?" She looked at him her gray eyes filled with pity and emotion, and trembling a little, answered:
"You will come back—I am sure you will come back."
Hesitating to read the true meaning of her look and tone, he said very softly:
"I shall come back—here?"
She nodded assent. He took her hand, bent across the table on which the little package lay and awkwardly kissed her on the forehead. Then he went away in the dusk, following the path through the woods which smell of verdure and freshly moistened earth.

Could Not Sleep.
Miss Gertrude Pratt, Wainley St., Barrie, Ont., writes: "I was very much run down and could not sleep either day or night, and my arms and legs ached so that I was very miserable. After using six boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I feel well and strong again."
A clean, well aired and well managed house results in good-natured inmates.

A REMARKABLE STATEMENT
Mrs. Sheldon Spent $1900 for Treatment Without Benefit. Finally Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.
Bismarck, Ill.—"While going through the Change of Life I suffered with headache, nervousness, flashes of heat, and I suffered so much I did not know what I was doing at times. I spent $1900 on doctors and medicine, but I did not get any good. One day a lady called at my home and said she had been as sick as I was at one time, and she had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She said she had been well so long I took it and now I am just as well as I ever was. I understand why women don't get so much pain and suffering they should know by taking my medicine. I took it twice it enough for it saved my life and kept me from the insane hospital."—Mrs. E. Sheldon, 507 E. Lincoln St., Englewood, Ill.

Timely Help For the Housewife.
Never move a cake in the oven until the center is set.
Sponge cakes baked in patty tins require a very hot oven.
Pickles should be kept in a dark dry place in stone or glass jars.
Butter the edges of the saucers and the contents will not boil over.
Flowers with a heavy fragrance are not pleasant in the sick room.
Pans for baking bread should be narrow to insure thorough baking of the bread.
If whipped cream is to be flavored it should be done before the cream is whipped.
Warm over meat loaves its flavor. Therefore, the gravy should be well seasoned.
An attractive little mold of rice served with canned peaches makes a dainty dessert.
Put a little salt on the dishes and all eggs are served and will wash off easily.
Mashed potatoes, if given a final brating with an egg beater, will be very light and fluffy.
If there is room in the kitchen for a waste basket it will be a great convenience to a house.
When a window is difficult to raise pour a little melted lard between the frame and the casing.
Spreading a little flour on the top of a cake will sometimes prevent the puffing from rising.
If you paste a label on a napkin, put in a cold dry place and it will keep neatly for one week.
Fish can be fried in fat which has been used for frying fish before, and the flavor will be better.
Green peas, three or four months old, can be cooked like a game bird, without stuffing. It is delicious.

Working Hours of Birds.
Our hours are nothing to the birds. Why, some birds work in the summer sixteen hours a day. Indefatigably they clear the crops of insects. The thrush gets up at half past two every summer morning. He is at work at once, and he never stops until half past nine at night—a clear sixteen hours. During that time he feeds his voracious young 'soot times' The blackbird starts to work at the same hour as the thrush, but he lays off earlier. His whistle blows at half past seven, and during his seventeen hours he has done his work. The sparrow-bird, which is a little smaller, starts to work at three in the morning, and his stopping time is nine at night. A last worker, the titmouse is said to feed his young six meals—meals of caterpillar mainly—in the long, hard, hot day.

Home Sick.
(By Walt Mason.)
There is no sickness more severe than that which knows when far away from comrades' feet, from good old friends and dear. A man may have the cough or snuff, the jaundice or the gout, and never know the dainty damps, if he's a nervous soul. But courage will not brace him up, when far away from home, he yearns for book and chair and pup, and for his little tooth comb. I used to scrap with David Dick, my neighbor, every day, and thought that I'd enjoy repose when I had come away. I built me then a little crib, among the mountains bare, and took my tucker and my bib, and spent my summer there. And how I longed no person knows, while I lived in that shack, to throw some bricks at Mr. Dose, and see him throw them back. Man loathe for old familiar things when he is abroad many rooms; no new-sounding ever brings the joy he feels at home. Some neighbors envy me my cot beside a snow-capped hill, where there are never flies to swat, and heat waves do not kill. But when I'm there I huddle up before the glowing fire, and long to see my cat and pup, my book-shelves and my lyre.
An elderly American, who had never seen a football match, was persuaded by a young enthusiast to attend an important one. "Now," said the young man, at the kick off, "you will see more excitement for a dollar and a half than you ever saw before." "I've my doubts about that," replied the old man, "but I'll see your marriage license cost me."

The Body-Building Power of BOVRIL
Leading experiments on human beings carried out by a well-known London British Physiologist, Dr. B. B. B. Bovril was added to the normal diet it produced an increase in flesh, bone and muscle equal to 10 to 20 times the amount of Bovril taken.
No increase in price since the War.

Milking the Public.
A writer in the Halifax Daily Echo deals trenchantly with those who are responsible for the increase in the price of milk in that city to thirteen cents per quart, and shows that with good grass the past summer and hay selling now at a record figure, the advance in price is not justified. He claims that the only article used in the maintenance of the cow which has greatly increased in price is that of chopped feed, which since the war has risen from $5.00 to $50.00 per ton, but which does not justify the increased price of so useful a family necessity. It is not so very long ago that the price of condensed milk to the city dealers at 1 1/2 cents per quart, now they charge 4 1/2 cents, and the dealers charge 4 1/2 cents per quart for delivering it, and collecting the pay. This increase in milk prices, says the Echo, has had the effect of causing many city households to reduce their supply by half and use to some extent condensed cream and milk. Many grocers would milk before have cut it out altogether, and yesterday vendors had quantities left on their hands, there being no sale for it.
There is one course open to the public to cut down as far as possible the use of any article for which an exorbitant price is asked. Just recently the price of Citec has very materially advanced. This was used as a good substitute for butter and oil, and was rapidly growing into public favor, but when a thirty cent tin is raised to fifty cents, some persons called a halt and will do without it, and the tin will be made general. It would cause the manufacturers to halt also, and consider a retrograde movement.
Bread, butter and milk are three household necessities which should be supplied to the general public at remunerative rates, but in these war times there seems to be a disposition to "milk the public" to the utmost extent. The use of articles for which an exorbitant price is asked, which keep household expenditures within the earning power of the user.
The Food Controller for the Dominion has just dealt with the flour millers, and the announcement is made that a net profit will be allowed of twenty-five cents per barrel on flour and of wheat milling under a license system, which looks like a real step in the direction of price-control of one of the most important food commodities. Before many months the price of flour will be similar to that of the Food Controller in connection with other necessities. (We hope the Food Controller will really prove the correctness of his title, and keep a firm control over those who handle household necessities, and thwart their avaricious designs. A fair and reasonable profit is what all producers are entitled to, beyond that especially at a time when the public are expected to assist the Red Cross and other agencies having for their object the welfare of the brave fellows who are battling for King and Country on land and sea, and hardly be classed under the head of fair dealing. The public have in their power to control prices to some extent by greatly reducing the use of articles the prices of which have been seropoled and still going up in the clouds, and where possible to put the boycott into operation.)

Rain Would Kill Us.
ATMOSPHERE SAVES OUR LIVES FROM BOMBARDMENT.
A scientific man writes: The fiercest bombardment conceivable would not be nearly so destructive to human life as an ordinary shower if it were not for the protective covering of our atmosphere. We live, move, and have our being at the bottom of an air room forty miles or more deep. Therefore, we are safe, not only from falling raindrops, but from meteorites and other wandering bodies from other spaces. But, supposing that it were possible for human beings to exist in an atmosphere that rose only to a few feet above their heads, and that storm clouds could form in the region outside such a low grade atmosphere, then every raindrop would prove so fatal to early creatures as if it were a steel bullet fired from a dynamite gun.

Best Nerve Specialist in England Was Consulted
But Nervous System Failed to Respond to Treatment Prescribed.
Between disorders frequently result from injury to the nerves in accidents or because of the shock to the system. The writer of this letter was injured in a fall with some consequences, and was treated by several doctors and consulted one of the greatest nerve specialists in England. But he seemed to do me much good. Hypnotism and in fact all the other forms were used, but never with more than temporary benefit.
Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has acted very differently. For it has built up my nervous system until I feel like my old self again. If this has done for me, I shall not regret the time and money I have spent in having written this letter. I have received many letters from people who have written to me, and I have been able to help many of them. I have received many letters from people who have written to me, and I have been able to help many of them.
