October 27th. Shackleton and his crew reached Elephant Island on April 14th, in boats, after a series of privations and sufferings in the drift ice, several of the party being then on the verge of physical collapse.

Owing to the seriousness of the food situation and the impossibility camping place on the bleak coast. Shackleton decided to make an effort to reach South Georgia, 760 miles distant, leaving the main party on Elephant Island in charge of Frank Wild, the second in command. Lieutenant Shackleton left April 24th, with five volunteers. Then ensued a fortnight of terrible struggles against blizzards and other difficulties, but finally the west coast of outh Georgia was sighted.

After a mighty effort, lasting two days, they succeeded in beaching their oat, and four days later arrived safely at the head of King Haakor Bay. On May 19th they started to ross the island, reaching the Stromess whaling station on May 20. There they secured an eighty ton orwegian whaler for an attempt to relieve the men left behind.

The whaler started south with a crew on May 26th, but found the ice oat, and after several attempts rectantly decided to turn north for tance to the Falklands.

The party on the beach at Elephant sland were all well when Shackleton and the canoe was found affoa left on April 24. They had five weeks'
