The advantage in using "SIMONDS"

LADY IRIS' MISTAKE;

— or the —

Hero of 'Surata'

CHAPTER XXXV.

The earl often wondered if he had done wisely in telling his daughter of his second marriage. She had completely changed. Her father's confession had not only wounded her love, but it had also lowered her pride; and now she found that to which she had sacrificed her whole life was a myth. She had nothing to be particularly proud of. If on one side she was well descended, on the other her people were commoners. She had sent her lover away, and had tried her best to conquer her love. She had made herself miserable and unhappy for her pride's sake; and now she found that the quality which was to have been her great moral support and consolation was little better than a broken reed. A certain sadness and gentleness of manner had come to her which was very different from her former brilliant animation.

The discipline had been sharp and severe; but she had benefited largely. She began to understand that the words "held with honor" had a better and nobler meaning than that which she had given to them. The honor lay not in adding to the splendor and glory of her house by a great alliance, but in faithfully discharging the duties that fell to the lot of its head. She began to see that her idea of pride was wrong, that there was honor in a noble life; honor in poverty, in labor, in toil; honor in everything except folly, disgrace, and sin. The words "held with honor" bore a different meaning now from that which she had drawn from them in the days of her pride. It had been a sharp and bitter lesson; but it had made a noble and good woman out of a proud and haughty girl.

There had been many long discussions between her father and herself. The earl wished his secret to be buried forever; but she would not agree to it, she would not "sail under false colors."

"Now that I know the truth myself, papa," she said, "I will hold that truth with honor. There must be no more disguise."

Ends Stubborn Coughs in a Hurry

For real effectiveness, this old home-made remedy has no equal. Ready and cheaply made.

You'll never know how quickly a bad cough can be conquered, until you try this famous old home-made remedy. Anyone who has coughed all day and all night, will say that the immediate relief given is almost like magic. It takes but a moment to prepare and really there is nothing better for coughs.

Into a 16-oz. bottle, put 2 1/2 ounces of Pinex, then add plain granulated sugar syrup to make 16 ounces. Or you can use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup. Either way, this mixture saves about two-thirds of the money usually spent for cough preparations, and gives you a more positive, effective remedy. It keeps perfectly, and tastes pleasant—children like it.

You can feel this take hold instantly, soothing and healing the membranes in all the air passages. It promptly loosens a dry, tight cough, and soon you will notice the phlegm thin out and then disappear altogether. A day's use usually breaks up an ordinary throat or chest cold, and it is also splendid for bronchitis, croup, hoarseness, and mucous asthma.

Pinex is a most valuable concentrated compound of certain Norway pine extract, the most reliable remedy for throat and chest ailments.

To avoid disappointment ask your druggist for "2 1/2 ounces of Pinex" with directions and don't accept anything else. Guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

She brought pens, ink and paper to him, and stood beside him while he wrote a letter to the editor of "Burke's Peerage," in which he said that he regretted he had not corrected the errors before, but that he had been absent from England for so many years that he had not thought of the matter; but he requested the editor to make an important alteration in the entry relating to himself. In future it was to read—

"Caledon, Earl of, Hugo Francis, Hyllton Fayne, fourteenth earl. Born May 24th, 18—; succeeded his father 1858. Educated at Eton and Oxford. Married—first, Guinevere, sole daughter and heiress of Sir Bernard Talbot of Broome, who died March 4th, 18—; secondly, Isabel Hyde, daughter of Ronald Hyde, Esquire, who died June 29th, 18—. Issue, one daughter, Iris, Lady Payne."

"Now, papa," said Lady Iris, "we have done what honor and honesty require of us. When people examine the next edition of the 'Peerage,' some will perhaps wonder that you were married twice, while they will see that I belong to Isabel Hyde, and not to Guinevere Talbot. But I do not suppose that one person in five thousand will care about the matter at all. Still, papa," she went on thoughtfully, "there was a faint suspicion of something having happened, I am sure. Do you remember what that lady whispered about me on the day of the Drawing-Room? I have thought of it a hundred times since, but could never understand it. It referred to your second marriage, you may rest assured."

"Perhaps so," replied Lord Caledon. "I should hardly think it possible that the marriage could quite escape observation. There may have been some slight rumor about it, but it never reached my ears."

"We are beyond the reach of rumor now," she said. "If any one speaks to us about the marriage, we can answer as we please, can we not papa? I shall always make the best of the difficulty by saying that people should not take things for granted, and that every one ought to have known by my face that I was the daughter of Isabel Hyde, papa," she added, "you have one thing more to do, and you must do it. You must send this lovely portrait of mamma to one of our best artists and have a beautiful painting executed from it. Will you?"

The Hair of Bayneham

—AND—

Lady Hutton's Ward.

CHAPTER I.

The time was the close of a bright, warm day in June; the place a little parlor in the most picturesque cottage to be found on the estate of Brynmar; the scene a strange one, the first that lived in the memory of Lady Hutton's ward, and the one that influenced her whole life.

There seems at times little or no harmony between nature and man. Outside the cottage, the bony woods of Brynmar were full of the brightness and beauty of summer. The golden sunbeams lingered almost tenderly on the tall, green trees; the wild flowers gave forth a rich tribute of rare perfume; the birds sang freely, and the busy bees hummed from flower to flower, gathering sweet honey from the fair blossoms. In the shade of the wood there was a deep silence, unbroken, save by the rippling of the little brook and the faint rustling of the leaves—a summer evening such as poets sing of: a golden flush of color, a glory of perfume and harmony.

Inside the cottage was a scene that told of the deepest human woe. The beauty of sunbeam and flower could not touch it. There was sorrow which nothing human could soften or alleviate. In vain the roses and jessamine peeped in at the bright windows, and bent their fair heads as though in sympathy. In vain the summer breeze came in laden with the fragrance of the hawthorn and the new-mown hay; in vain birds sang and flowers bloomed; in vain did the sweet voices of nature seem to whisper of love and hope; it was all in vain, for a human heart was breaking there, from excess of sorrow and woe.

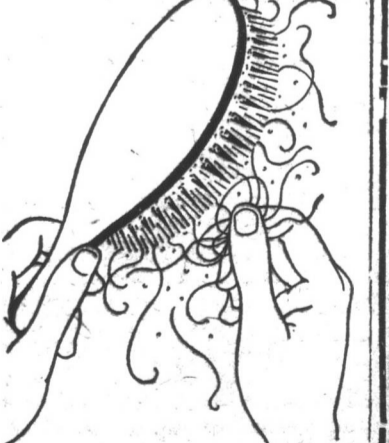

It was a strange scene. The parlor was bare and poorly furnished; no carpet, no pictures, no books, nothing that told of comfort; stern, dread poverty was shown in the few articles of furniture; in a small chair near the centre of the room sat a lady magnificently dressed, costly velvets and rich silks swept the cottage floor. She was in the very prime of life, a tall, stately, well-formed figure, a clear-cut, calm, patrician face, bearing the impress of many troubles. No one ever called Lady Hutton beautiful, but in the exquisite refinement of every feature, in the expression of the clear eyes, and the smiles that at rare intervals lighted her face, there was a charm deeper than that of vivid coloring or perfect form. Her dark-brown hair was plainly braided, her dress, in its simple elegance, was perfection. She looked what she was; a thorough English gentlewoman, calm, elegant, and refined. If any storm of passion had ever crossed her quiet face, there was no trace of it now; if scorn, or hate, or love had ever dwelt in that quiet heart, they were all dead. She seemed as one who looks out upon the world, yet takes little interest in it.

Far different from the calm, passionate lady, was the beautiful woman who half knelt, half crouched upon the floor, and covered with hot, bitter tears, the white, soft fingers of a little child. A wailing mass of rich, golden brown hair fell over her shoulders in splendid confusion and disorder; the face, though deadly pale and stained with tears, was a most beautiful one. There was a supple grace in every line of her figure, a dignity even in her self-abasement, yet Magdalen Hurst was but a simple villager, owing none of her rare beauty to noble birth or high descent. She had no thought of her beauty. If ever woman's face looked as though her heart were broken, Magdalen Hurst's looked so now. Passionately, wistfully, she kissed the child's hands and buried her face on the little head—kissed her as though she hungered and craved for love—kissed her with all the warmth of affection and the passion of despair. "My little Hilda," she cried, "look at me; let me carry your sweet face in my heart; look at me darling!"

The little one raised her wondering eyes to the white, wistful face, and there was a strong resemblance be-
