THE CAMP.

A Visit From the Minister of Militia,

Who Has a Quiet Talk With the Officers,

But Does Not Inspect—A Gettysburg

Veteran on the Hill—The Second

Last Day—Notes.

Hon. J. C. Patterson, Minister of Militia, was the guest of Lieut.-Col. Smith and staff at the camp yesterday. He will remain over to-day and spend his time mingling with the officers, and to use his own words, he will seek for information about camp life, in order to present the volunteer's case and his battles in Parliament with an intelligent idea of what is needed.

It was about 10 o'clock when the Minister of Militia appeared on the field in company with the D. A. C. They walked leisurely over to the camp of the field, Col. Smith indicating the different points of interest on the way. On their way they were met by Joseph Marshall, M.P., and Surgeon Roome, M.P., of the Twenty-sixth. After a handshake and a chat here the Minister was taken over to the Thirtieth. The battalion was allowed to stand easy and the officers came out to be presented. After another handshake and a "Howdy-do" to meet-yes from all, the Minister was taken over to the Thirtieth. The battalion was allowed to stand easy and the officers came out to be presented. After another handshake and a "Howdy-do" to meet-yes from all, the Minister was taken over to the Thirtieth. The battalion was allowed to stand easy and the officers came out to be presented.

One of the officers of the junction volunteered the assurance that in that case they were all ready to back the Minister up.

Mr. Patterson went on to state that he would be present for a couple of days. He was also certain that he could learn more by talking with the officers about the camp than by reading a dozen statistical reports. The decision of enthusiasm among the modern volunteers also came in for a little caustic criticism. When the Minister had been a volunteer he had not found a dearth of that article, but the commander of the Thirtieth hinted that times had probably changed since then, and allowed that a little trouble or strife might possibly be awakened in the breast of the volunteer in the order for military life that was now apparently dead or dying.

With a polite bow the Minister withdrew, the officers went back to their stations, and the battalion continued their drill.

The Thirtieth, the Twenty-eighth, the Twenty-sixth and the First Hussars were each visited in turn and addressed in precisely the same strain. This concluded the afternoon's work.

A route march is on the programme for this afternoon.

The officers of the Twenty-sixth are all wearing a band of craps on their arm on account of the death of their adjutant, M. J. Beam, of St. Mary's. Mr. Beam had fully intended being with the battalion up to a few days before camp, when he was stricken with heart trouble and terminated fatally. A testimonial will be engraved and presented to the widow and children as a mark of esteem. A wreath, in the design of the last roll call of the staff of arms, has also been forwarded to the bereaved family.

The officers are trying to make arrangements to have the battalion stop off on their way home and attend the funeral of a body. If this cannot be done, the band and officers will attend anyway.

The second last day in camp was a very quiet nature. The battery went to Port Stanley in the morning, and the ground they have occupied for so many days known to the men. The Hussars took their reconnoitering expedition through the country, each troop taking a different direction. At noon they all turned up at Springbank, where dinner was cooked and eaten. The regiment got back to the camp about 4:30 p.m. and without accident. The infantry continue their drill and make a better showing every day. Already the men are talking about home, and the first sign of the breaking of camp was to be heard in the order book, where the "march in due" was conspicuous by its absence. To-day is the last day of drill, and to-morrow morning will be spent in packing up and catching trains.

A man somewhat past the meridian of life, with iron gray whiskers and a star on his breast, was a visitor to the camp yesterday. He was unassuming in manner and appearance and apparently enjoyed the sight of the different troops as they went through their field movements in battalions. He had evidently been a soldier, and was the case; in fact, he was one of the leaders of the "forlorn hope" of the Iron Brigade at Gettysburg in the late American war. Sergeant Major J. H. Smith, his name, and his regiment was the Sixth Wisconsin. His home is in Columbus, Ohio, but Mr. Smith is in Canada at present in the interests of the Locked Wire Fence Company, of which he is president. He was in the city yesterday from London, and having a little time at his disposal he took in the camp. The battle of Gettysburg was fought on July 1, 2 and 3, 1863, almost exactly 30 years ago. It was found necessary to capture a certain gun that was doing great havoc among the northern troops, and for this purpose a brigade was formed consisting of fifteen men of each of the following troops: The Sixth Wisconsin, Second Wisconsin, Seventh Wisconsin, Nineteenth Indiana and Twenty-fourth Michigan. Their chance of capturing this coveted gun was so slim that the charge was called the "forlorn hope." But capture it they did, and not only that, but when Archer's South Carolina Brigade undertook its recapture they took prisoners the entire brigade. Of course many lives were lost in the action. Mr. Smith received no less than eight wounds himself. The star on the major's breast is a part of the gun that was captured. Each of the survivors earned the sobriquet of "The Iron Brigade."

Mr. Smith, like all old soldiers, likes to spin a yarn, and yesterday he told one about Davy Crockett, the originator of the term "Be sure you're right, then go ahead," and the Tennessee representative of the lower House of Congress.

Mr. Crockett, who was one of the gallant men who died fighting in the battle of the Alamo, at San Antonio, Texas, was very fond of a joke, and his ready repartee stood him in good stead on the floor of the House.

He had a fellow Congressman named Major White, who was of the dandified persuasion, and Mr. Crockett used to delight in "taking him out." Both men visited a managerie one day in the same party. One particular monkey seemed to attract Mr. Crockett's attention, and he passed the remark that it looked very much like Major White. A judge on the arm from a companion caused him to look round, and there was the major himself, boiling over with rage. Mr. Crockett took immediate means to recover himself. "Ladies and gentlemen," said he, "it's very evident that an apology is due to some one, and you will decide to whom it is due I will make it on the spot."

This was the straw that broke the camel's back. Major White immediately withdrew, and, after a time, the party returned to their hotel. Mr. Crockett had hardly got into his room before a friend of the major waited on him to demand satisfaction and a meeting.

"As I am the challenged party," said David, "I believe I have the choice of weapons. Have I not?"

"Yes, certainly," was the reply. "You may choose the weapon that I will meet him in fifteen minutes with bow and arrows in the city park."

The duel never came off.

NOTES ABOUT CAMP.

Capt. Hurlbut, of the Fortieth Battalion, Northumberland, visited Lieut.-Col. Smith yesterday.

Col. Scott of the Twenty-second Kinardine Battalion, was the indefatigable instructor of musketry at the ranges this year. His tale tells the usual story of the sun.

W. Hutchins, M.P. for North Middlesex, was with Chief Williams, M.P., of the Twenty-sixth, at the camp yesterday.

Corporal Gifford, who is suffering from a broken leg, will be taken home to-day. Private Mahler, who suffers from a fractured wrist, was sent home a day or so ago.

Master parade was held yesterday. Major Macle, of the Thirtieth, is field officer for to-day. Surgeon Parke, of the Twenty-eighth, attends the wounded.

"Dulcet temp ever I see," says Staff Sergeant Conroy.

The officers of the Thirty-third are: Lieut.-Col. J. G. Wilson, Majors J. Varcoe and J. A. Wilson, Adjutant Combe, Surgeon Holmes, Paymaster F. Jordan, Quartermaster Beck, Captain Holmes, Wilson, Williams, Rance, Hays, McDonald, Johnston (Twenty-first) and Young; Lieutenants Chisholm, Vanstone, Scarlett, Grigg, McTaggart, Dr. Shaw, Beacon, Kane, Dolg, Hamilton, Goldthorpe.

The volunteers presented by Capt. Hobbs to the best shots in the different companies of the Hussars were distributed yesterday. Corp. Fox, of "A" troop; Trooper Hays, of "B" troop; Trooper James Smith, of "C" troop, and Kellogg, of "D" troop were the recipients. Kellogg made the highest score of 55.

ACCIDENTALLY HANGED.

Strangled to Death While Swinging in an Extemporized Hammock.

New York, June 28.—Robert Zangle, the 14-year-old son of Frank Zangle, a butcher at 111 Hopkins street, Williamsburg, accidentally hanged himself yesterday afternoon in the cellar of his house. The boy was sent to the cellar for a pail of water. He did not return, and his father, when he went looking for him, found the neck of the boy tightly caught in a rope that was used for holding fresh-boiled bologna. The boy was dead. Three feet from the ceiling and reaching to within about eight inches of the ground. Both ropes were noosed. From a younger son Zangle learned that Robert and his companions were in the habit of making hammocks of themselves, by putting their heads in one noose, and their feet in another, and hanging to it. It is believed that while waiting for the pail to fill Robert put his neck in danger once or twice, and was strangled.

THE BORDENS WILL MOVE.

Not Going to Europe, But Seek an Aristocratic Neighborhood.

FALL RIVER, June 28.—Mrs. Wright, wife of Sheriff Wright, visited Lizzie Borden yesterday, and the ladies went out for a drive together. Mrs. Wright was attentive to Miss Borden, and the latter's impression, and took a maternal interest in her because Lizzie had been a schoolmate of Mrs. Wright's daughter. Mr. Holmes says positively that the Borden girls do not intend to go abroad with their old father. They will move from their old home very soon. They are looking for a house in the aristocratic section of the city.

A sermon preached by the Rev. J. G. Gammons, of the Little Church in the Square, was very interesting and well received. In the course of his discourse he said Lizzie Borden had been acquitted by law, but public opinion was paramount to law. He was indignant at the scoffers of the police and the district attorney. Although he was a law-abiding citizen, he was in good faith an acquittal before a fair court of justice, he said it was unfair to exclude certain testimony bearing upon the case.

What Shakespeare Might Have Said. To take or not to take: that is the question. Whether 'tis better to suffer the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune, or to take arms against a sea of troubles, and by opposing, end them. Or something like that, and, in his taking, end the case.

Shakespeare didn't say that, but very likely he would have said something similar if he were living in this nineteenth century when so many suffer untold agonies from indigestion. Of course, he would have gone on to say that a man must be a fool not to take the "something," which would put an end to the "pangs and torments" spoken of if he could get it. Now, it is a fact that indigestion, which is the cause of dyspepsia, constipation and a host of other ailments, is a condition of the whole system. It is a fact, also, that Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will so purify the blood and enrich it all the weakened organs are revitalized and strengthened, it is a guarantee to do this. If it doesn't, your money will be returned to you.

Our Johnny isn't quite sure of the year of the battle of Gettysburg, but you can't leave him on the day and hour of the Sunday school picnic.

A man's wife should always be the same especially to her husband; but if she is weak and nervous, and uses Carter's Pills, she cannot be. They will make her "feel like a different person," at least so they all say, and their husbands are so too.
