

Curiosity and Queer Superstitions of People Who Visit the Es- tablishment.

In conversation with the writer he said: "There is more fun to be squared in the daily routine of the Morgue, than there is to be found in many of those continuous performance theatres. Remember one case, while I was there, where a firm of Tenth Avenue undertakers called for the body of a man, whose relatives had identified him, and who ordered that the corpse would be sent to 48th Street and Tenth Avenue. I forget the name. However, when the undertaker laid the body out, there he was nearly mobbed. He had taken away the wrong body, and the friends and relations of the deceased thought he was trying to play a joke on them by 'ringing' in a gray-haired old cleric instead of a handsome corpse which belonged to them. He came back to the Morgue."

Mrs. Gaines of the Jersey City Club made a speech of welcome. The address of the President, Mrs. Yardley, was devoted to an explanation of the aims and purposes of the organization, after which the reports of the various clubs were heard. In the afternoon a paper on the "Kindergarten" was read by Mrs. Fannie
